1. To lift; to raise from the ground.

H E A

- Had ris'n, or heav'd his head, but that the will
And high permission of all-ruling heaven
Left him at large. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
2. To carry.
Now we bear the king
Tow'rd Calais: grant him there; and there being seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea. Shakespeare's Henry V.
3. To raise; to lift.
So daunted, when the giant saw the knight,
His heavy hand he heaved up on high,
And him to dust thought to have batter'd quite. Fa. Queen.
Unhappy that I am, I cannot heave
My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty
According to my bond, no more nor less. Shakespeare's King Lear.
He dy'd in fight;
Fought next my person, as in comfort fought,
Save when he heav'd his shield in my defence,
And on his naked side receiv'd my wound. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
4. To cause to swell.
The groans of ghosts, that cleave the earth with pain,
And heave it up: they pant and flick half way. Dryden.
The glittering finny swarms,
That heave our friths and crowd upon our shores. Thomson.
5. To force up from the breast.
Made the no verbal quest?
—Yes, once or twice he heav'd the name of father
Pantingly forth, as if it press'd his heart. Shakespeare's King Lear.

English for foolish birds fallen into their net, forsook their hill, and marched into the plain. Hayward.
- TO HEAVE. v. n.
1. To pant; to breathe with pain.
'Tis such as you,
That creep like shadows by him, and do sigh
At each his needle's heaving; such as you Nourish the cause of his awaking. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
He heaves for breath, which, from his lungs supply'd,
And fetch'd from far, distends his lab'ring side. Dryden.
2. To labour.
The church of England had struggled and heaved at a reformation ever since Wickliff's days. Atterbury.
3. To rise with pain; to swell and fall.
Thou hast made my curdled blood run back,
My heart heave up, my hair to rise in bristles. Dryden.
The wand'ring breath was on the wing to part;
Weak was the pulse, and hardly heav'd the heart. Dryden.
No object affects my imagination so much as the sea or ocean: I cannot see the heaving of this prodigious bulk of waters, even in a calm, without a very pleasing astonish-
Frequent for breath his panting bosom heaves. Prior.
The heaving tide
In widen'd circles beats on either side. Gay's Trivia.
4. To heave; to feel a tendency to vomit.
HEAVE. n. f. [from the verb.]

It is a knell
That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
These, the late
Heav'n banish'd host, left desert utmost hell. Milton.
All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heav'n fall'n, in station stood, or just array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
3. The supreme power; the sovereign of heaven.
Now heav'n help him! Shakespeare's King Lear.
The will
And high permission of all-ruling heav'n Left him at large. Milton.
The prophets were taught to know the will of God, and thereby instruct the people, and enabled to prophecy, as a testimony of their being sent by heaven. Temple.
4. The pagan gods; the celestial.
Our brows
No more obey the heavens than our courtiers. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Take phyllick, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just. Shakespeare's King Lear.
They can judge as fully of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heaven
Will not have earth to know. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Heav'n! what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at every blow. Dryden.
5. Elevation; sublimity.
O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heav'n of invention. Shakespeare's Henry V. Prolog.
6. It is often used in composition.
HEAVEN-BEGOTT. Begot by a celestial power.
If I am heav'n-begot, assert your son
By some sure sign. Dryden.
- HEAVEN-BORN. Descended from the celestial regions; native of heaven.
If a fever fires his sulphurous blood,
In every fit he feels the hand of God,
And heav'n-born flame. Dryden's Juvenal, Sat. 13.
Oh heav'n-born sisters! source of art!
Who charm the sense, or mend the heart;
Who lead fair virtue's train along,
Moral truth, and mystic song! Pope.
- HEAVEN-BRED. Produced or cultivated in heaven.
Much is the force of heav'n-bred poetry. Shakespeare.
- HEAVEN-BUILT. Built by the agency of gods.
My soul inspire,
As when we wrapt Troy's heav'n-built walls in fire. Pope.
His arms had wrought the destin'd fall
Of sacred Troy, and raz'd her heav'n-built wall. Pope.
- HEAVEN-DIRECTED.
1. Raised towards the sky.
Who taught that heav'n-directed spire to rise? Pope.
2. Taught by the powers of heaven.
O sacred weapon! left for truth's defence;
To all but heav'n-directed hands deny'd;
The muse may give it, but the gods must guide. Pope.
- HEAVENLY. adj. [from heaven.]
1. Resembling heaven; supremely excellent.
As the love of heaven makes one heavenly, the love of virtue virtuous, so doth the love of the world make one become worldly. Steele.
Not Maro's muse, who sung the mighty man;
Nor Pindar's heav'nly lyre, nor Horace when a swan. Dryden.
2. Celestial; inhabiting heaven.
Adoring first the genius of the place,
Then earth, the mother of the heav'nly race. Dryden's Æn.
- HEAVENLY. adv.
1. In a manner resembling that of heaven.
In these deep solitudes and awful cells,
Where heav'nly pensive contemplation dwells,
And ever-musing melancholy reigns,
What means this tumult in a vestal's veins? Pope.
2. By the agency or influence of heaven.
Truth and peace and love shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, whose happy-making light alone,
Our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.
- HEAVENWARD. adv. [from heaven and ward, Saxon.] Towards heaven.
I prostrate lay,
By various doubts impell'd, or to obey,
Or to object; at length, my mournful look Heav'nward erect, determin'd, thus I spoke. Prior.
- HEAVILY. adv. [from heavy.]
1. With great ponderousness.
Grievously; afflictively.
Ease must be impracticable to the envious: they lie under a double misfortune; common calamities and common belie-fings fall heavily upon them. Collier's Essay.
2. Sorrowfully;

H E A

3. Sorrowfully; with an air of dejection.
I came hither to transport the tydings,
Which I have heavily born. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
—O, I have past a miserable night. Shakespeare's R. III.
This O'Neil took very heavily, because his condition in the army was less pleasant to him. Clarendon.
- HEAVINESS. n. f. [from heavy.]
1. Ponderousness; the quality of being heavy; weight.
The subject is concerning the heaviness of several bodies, or the proportion that is required betwixt any weight and the power which may move it. Wilkins.
2. Dejection of mind; depression of spirit.
We are, at the hearing of some, more inclined unto sorrow and heaviness; of some more mollified, and softened in mind.
Hooker, b. v. f. 38.
Heaviness in the heart of man maketh it stoop; but a good word maketh it glad. Prov. xii. 25.
Ye greatly rejoice; though now for a season ye are in heaviness, through manifold temptations. 1 Pet. i. 6.
Against ill chances men are ever merry;
But heaviness foreruns the good event. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Let us not burthen our remembrance with An heaviness that's gone. Shakespeare's Tempest.
3. Inaptitude to motion or thought; sluggishness; torpidness;
dulness of spirit; languidness; languor.
Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the weight. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
What means this heaviness that hangs upon me?
This lethargy that creeps through all my senses? Add. Cato.
He would not violate that sweet recess,
And found besides a welcome heaviness,
Which seiz'd his eyes. Dryden.
A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, heaviness, and lassit-tude, are signs of a too plentiful meal. Arbutnot on Aliment.
4. Oppression; crush; affliction.
5. Deepness or richness of soil.
As Alexandria exported many commodities, so it received some from other European ports, which, by reason of the fatness and heaviness of the ground, Egypt did not produce; such as metals, wood, and pitch. Arbutnot on Coins.
- HEAVY. adj. [from heav, Saxon.]
1. Weighty; ponderous; tending strongly to the center; contrary to light.
Mercurius tells us, that a little child, with an engine of an hundred double pulleys, might move this earth, though it were much heavier than it is. Wilkins.
2. Sorrowful; dejected; depressed.
Let me not be light;
For a light wife doth make a heavy husband. Shakespeare.
3. Grievous; oppressive; afflictive.
Menelaus bore a heavy hand over the citizens, having a malicious mind. 2 Mac. v. 23.
Let not your ears despite my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviness found
That ever yet they heard. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
If the cause be not good, the king himself hath a heavy reckoning to make. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Are you so gossip'd
To pray for this good man, and for his issue?
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Chartres, at the levee,
Tells with a sneer the tydings heavy. Swift.
4. Wanting alacrity; wanting briskness of appearance.
My heavy eyes, you say, confess
A heart to love and grief inclin'd. Prior.

But of a heavy, dull, degenerate mind. Dryden's Fables.
7. Drowsy; dull; torpid.
Peter and they that were with him were heavy with sleep. Lu. ix. 33.
8. Slow; sluggish.
But let thy spiders, that suck up thy venom,
And heavy gaited toads lie in their way. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
9. Stupid; foolish.
This heavy headed revel, East and West
Makes us traduc'd, and tax'd of other nations. Shakespeare.
I would not be accounted to base minded, or heavy headed, that I will confess that any of them is for valour, power, or fortune better than myself. Kneller's History of the Turks.
I put into thy hands what has been the diversion of some of my idle and heavy hours. Locke's Epistle to the Reader.
When alone, your time will not lie heavy upon your hands for want of some trifling amusement. Swift.
10. Burdensome; troublesome; tedious.
Hearing that there were forces coming against him, and not

H E C

- willing that they should find his men heavy and laden with booty, he returned unto Scotland. Eaton's Henry VII.
12. Not easily digested; not light to the stomach.
Such preparations as retain the oil or fat, are most heavy to the stomach, which makes baked meat hard of digestion. Arb.
13. Rich in soil; fertile, as heavy lands.
14. Deep; cumbersome, as heavy roads.
- HEAVY. adv. As an adverb it is only used in composition; heavily.
Your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the weary beast. If. xlv. 1.
Come unto me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Mat. ii. 28.
- HEBDOMAD. n. f. [from hebdomas, Latin.] A week; a space of seven days.
Computing by the medical month, the first hebdomad or sep-tenary consists of six days, seventeen hours and a half. Brown.
- HEBDOMADAL. adj. [from hebdomas, Latin.] Weekly;
HEBDOMADARY. } consisting of seven days.
As for hebdomadal periods, or weeks, in regard of their sabbaths, they were observed by the Hebrews. Brown.
- TO HEBETATE. v. a. [from hebetare, Latin; hebetare, French.] To dull; to blunt; to stupify.
The eye, especially if hebetated, might cause the same perception. Harvey on Consumptions.
Beef may confer a robustness on the limbs of my son, but will hebetate and clog his intellects. Arb. and Pope's M. Scrib.
- HEBETATION. n. f. [from hebetate.]
1. The act of dulling.
2. The state of being dulled.
- HEBETUDE. n. f. [from hebetudo, Latin.] Dulness; obtuseness; subtlety, activity or hebetude, cause more or less truculent plagues. Harvey on the Plague.

- HEBRAISM. n. f. [from hebraisme, French; hebraismus, Latin.] A Hebrew idiom.
Milton has infused a great many Latinisms, as well as Græcisms, and sometimes Hebraisms, into his poem. Spectator.
- HEBRAIST. n. f. [from hebraus, Latin.] A man skilled in Hebrew.
- HEBRICIAN. n. f. [from Hebrew.] One skilful in Hebrew.
The words are more properly taken for the air or ether than the heavens, as the best Hebricians understand them. Raleigh.
The nature of the Hebrew verse, as the meanest Hebrician knoweth, consists of uneven feet. Peacham.
- HECATOMB. n. f. [from hecatombe, French; εκατόμνη, Græc.] A sacrifice of an hundred cattle.
In rich mens homes
I bid kill some beasts, but no hecatombs;
None starve, none surfeit so. Donne.
One of these three is a whole hecatomb,
And therefore only one of them shall die. Dryden.
Her triumphant sons in war succeed,
And slaughter'd hecatombs around 'em bleed. Addison.
- HECTICAL. adj. [from hectic, French, from εἶς.]
HECTICK. } adj. [from hectic, French, from εἶς.]
1. Habitual; constitutional.
This word is joined only to that kind of fever which is slow and continual, and ending in a consumption, is the contrary to those fevers which arise from a plethora, or too great fulness from obstruction, because it is attended with too lax a state of the excretory passages, and generally those of the skin; whereby so much runs off as leaves not resistance enough in the contractile vessels to keep them sufficiently distended, so that they vibrate oftener, agitate the fluids the more, and keep them thin and hot. Quincy.
A hectic fever hath got hold
Of the whole substance, not to be controul'd. Donne.
2. Troubled with a morbid heat.
No hectic student fears the gentle maid. Taylor.
- HECTICK. n. f. An hectic fever.
Like the hectic in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
- HECTOR. n. f. [from the name of Hector, the great Homeric warrior.]
1. A bully; a blustering, turbulent, perversicacious, noisy fellow.
Those usurping hectors, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. South's Sermons.
We'll take one cooling cup of nectar,
And drink to this celestial hector. Prior.
- TO HECTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.
They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be hectored out of
it. Government of the Tongue.
The weak low spirit, fortune makes her slave;
But she's a drudge, when hector'd by the brave. Dryden.
An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, hectoring his servants, and calling for supper. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.

HED

- To HEDCTOR. v. n. To play the bully; to bluffer.
They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and bedstoring, others scolding and reviling. Stillingsfleet.
One would think the bedstoring, the storming, the fullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Spelt.
Don Carlos made her chief director,
That the might o'er the servants bedstoring. Swift.
HEDERA'CEOUS. adj. [hederaceus, Lat.] Producing ivy. Dict.
HEDGE. n. f. [hedge, Saxon.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes.
It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer's Husbandry.
The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.
Through the verdant maze
Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomson.
HEDGE, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile, of the lowest class: perhaps from a hedge, or hedge-born man, a man without any known place of birth.
There are five in the first flew: the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shakespeare.
The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate vicar can be presumed to do. Swift.
A person, who, by his stile and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-priest in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.
To HEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To inclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing.
Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Ecclef. xxviii. 24.
Those alleys must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon, Essay 47.
2. To obstruct.
I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Hof. ii. 6.
3. To incircle for defence.
England, bedged in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes. Shakespeare, King John.
There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That reason can but peep to what it would. Shakespeare, Hamlet.
4. To shut up within an inclosure.
It must not be paid and exported in ready money; so says our law; but that is a law to hedge in the cuckoo, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange? Locke.
5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as into a hedge.
Bay not me,
I'll not endure it: you forget yourself
To hedge me in: I am a soldier. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
When I was hasty, thou delay'dst me longer:
I pray thee, let me hedge one moment more
Into thy promise; for thy life prefer'd.
When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own. Swift's Directions to the Postman.
To HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.
I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch; and yet you rogue will enscourage your rags, your catamountain looks, your red-lettice phrases. Shakespeare.
HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth; meanly born.
He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain,
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.
HEDGE-HOG. n. f. [hedge and hog.]
1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in an hedge.
Like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their prickles at my foot-fall. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience,
The collyrium of Albertus; that is, to make one see in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under part, head, belly and legs, within his thickest of prickles. Ray on the Creation.
2. A term of reproach.
Didst thou not kill this king?
—I grant ye.
—Do'st grant me, hedge-hog? Shakespeare, Richard III.
3. A plant. Ainsworth.
4. The globe-fish. Ainsworth.

HEE

- HEDGE-HYSSOP. n. f. [hedge and hyssop.] A species of willow-wood.
Hedge-hyssop is a purging medicine, and a very rough one: externally it is said to be a vulnerary. Hill's Mat. Medica.
HEDGE-MUSTARD. n. f. A plant.
The flower has four leaves, expanded in a crucial form: the point becomes a long, slender, bivalve pod, divided by a partition into two cells, which contain many round seeds.
The species are five. Miller.
HEDGE-NETTLE. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.
HEDGE-NOTE. n. f. [hedge and note.] A word of contempt for low writing.
When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left these hedge-notes for another sort of poem, which was also full of pleasant railery. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.
HEDGE-PIG. n. f. [hedge and pig.] A young hedge-hog.
Thrice the brindled cat hath mew'd,
Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
HEDGE-ROW. n. f. [hedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for inclosures.
Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green. Milton.
The fields in the northern side are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle. Berkeley to Pope.
HEDGE-SPARROW. n. f. [hedge and sparrow.] A sparrow that lives in bushes.
The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had lost his bill off by its young. Shakespeare, K. Lear.
HE'DGING-BILL. n. f. [hedge and bill.] A cutting hook used in making hedges.
Comes master Dametas with a hedging-bill in his hand, Chaffing and swearing. Sidney.
HE'DGER. n. f. [from hedge.] One who makes hedges.
The labour'd ox
In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the twink'd hedger at his supper sat. Milton.
He would be laugh'd at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country hedger at past fifty. Locke.
To HEED. v. a. [heban, Saxon.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.
With pleasure Argus the musician heeds;
But wonders much at those new vocal reeds. Dryden.
He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it, and with attention heed all the parts of it. Locke.
HEED. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Care; attention.
With wanton heed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running,
Take heed that, in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads. Locke.
Thou must take heed, my Portius;
The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Addison's Cato.
2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.
Either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take heed of their company. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:
Take heed ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakespeare, Merry Wives of Windsor.
3. Care to avoid.
We should take heed of the neglect or contempt of his worship. Tillotson's Sermons.
4. Notice; observation.
Speech must come by hearing and learning; and birds give more heed, and mark words more than beasts. Bacon.
5. Seriousness; steadfastness.
He did unfeal them; and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a heed
Was in his countenance. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
6. Regard; respectful notice.
It is a way of calling a man a fool, when no heed is given to what he says. L'Estrange.
HE'EDFUL. adj. [from heed.]
1. Watchful; cautious; suspicious.
Give him heedful note;
For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;
And, after, we will both our judgments join,
In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
2. Attentive; careful; observing.
I am commanded
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
Where fame, late ent'ring at his heedful ears,
Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue. Shakespeare, H. VI.
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other. Shakespeare.
Thou, heedful of advice, secure proceed;
My praise the precept is, be thine the deed. Pope's Odyssey.
HE'EDFULLY. adv. [from heedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.
Let the learner maintain an honourable opinion of his instructor.

And heigh-ho for the honour of old England. Dryden.
HEIGHT. n. f. [from high.]
1. Elevation above the ground; any place assigned.
Into what pit thou fect'st,
From what height fall'n. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
2. Altitude; space measured upwards.
Abroad I'll study thee,
As he removes far off, that great heights takes. Donne.
There is in Ticinium, in Italy, a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty. Bacon's Natural History.
An amphitheatre appear'd,
Rais'd in degrees, to sixty paces rear'd;
That when a man was plac'd in one degree,
Height was allow'd for him above to see. Dryden.
An amphitheatre's amazing height
Here fills the eye with terror and delight. Addison.
3. Degree of latitude.
Guinea lieth to the North sea, in the same height as Peru to the South. Abbot's Description of the World.
4. Summit; ascent; towering eminence.
From Alpine heights the father first descends;
His daughter's husband in the plain attends. Dryden's Æn.
Every man of learning need not enter into their difficulties, nor climb the heights to which some others have arrived. Watts.
5. Elevation of rank; station of dignity.
By him that rais'd me to this careful height,
From that contented hap which I enjoy'd,
I never did incense his majesty Against Clarence. Shakespeare's Richard III.
Ten kings had from the Norman conqueror reign'd,
When England to her greatest height attain'd,
Of pow'r, dominion, glory, wealth and state. Daniel.
6. The utmost degree; full completion.
Putrefaction doth not rise to its height at once. Bacon.
Did not the
Of Timna first betray me, and reveal
The secret, wrested from me in the height
Of nuptial love profess'd? Milton's Agonistes.
Hide me from the face
Of God, whom to behold was then my height
Of happiness! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
7. Utmost exertion.
Come on, fir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding. Shakespeare, All's well that ends well.
8. State of excellence; advance towards perfection.

To HE'IGHTEN. v. a. [from height.]
1. To raise higher.
2. To improve; to meliorate.
3. To aggravate.
Foreign states gave us their assistance in reducing our country to a state of peace; and which of them used their endeavours to heighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evils of a civil war? Addison's Freeholder.
4. To improve by decorations.
As in a room, contrived for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the area; so in the heightenings of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion. Dryden's Span. Fryar, Dedication.
HEINOUS. adj. [baineux, French, from hain, hate; or from the Teutonic hain, flame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree.
To abrogate or innovate the gospel of Christ, if men or angels angels should attempt, it were most heinous and accursed sacrilege.

 This is the man should do the bloody deed:
 The image of a wicked heinous fault
 Lives in his eye. Shakespeare's King John.
 As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us. Tillotson's Sermons.
HE'INOUSLY. adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.
HE'INOUSNESS. n.f. [from heinous.] Atrociousness; wickedness.
 He who can treat offences provoking to God as jests and trifles, must have very little sense of the heinousness of them.
Rogers's Sermons.
HEIR. n.f. [heire, old Fr. heres, Latin.] One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.
 An heir signifies the eldest, who is, by the laws of England, to have all his father's land. Locke.
 What lady is that?
 — The heir of Alanof, Rosaline her name. Shakespeare.
 That I'll give my voice on Richard's side,
 To bar my master's heirs in true descent,
 God knows, I will not do it. Shakespeare, Richard III.
 Being heirs together of the grace of life. Pet. iii. 7.
 The young extravagant heir had got a new steward, and was resolved to look into his estate before things grew desperate. Swift.
 Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost,
 And I his heir in misery alone. Pope's Odyssey.
 The heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions. Swift.
 To HEIR. v.a. [from the noun.] To inherit.
 His sons in blooming youth were snatch'd by fate;
 One only daughter heir'd the royal state. Dryden's Æn.
HEIRESS. n.f. [from heir.] An inheritrix; a woman that inherits.
 An heiress she, while yet alive;
 All that was her's to him did give. Waller.
 Æneas, though he married the heiress of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law. Dryd.
HEIRLESS. adj. [from heir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.
 I still think of
 The wrong I did myself; which was so much,
 That heirless it hath made my kingdom. Shakef. Wint. Tale.
HEIRSHIP. n.f. [from heir.] The state, character, or privileges of an heir.
 A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will, to of his heirship. Ayliffe's Paragon.

HEIRLOOM. n.f. [heir and geloma, goods, Sax.] Any furniture or moveable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inseparable from the freehold.
 Achilles' sceptre was of wood,
 Transmitted to the hero's line;
 Thence through a long descent of kings
 Came an heirloom, as Homer sings. Swift.
HELD. The preterite and part pass. of hold.
 A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends. Ecclusf.
 If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand, he had executed his design. Dryden.
HELLACAL. adj. [heliague, Fr. from ἥλιος.] Emerging from the lustre of the sun, or falling into it.
 Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its heliacal ascent. Brown.
HELIACALLY. adv. [from heliacal.]
 From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but heliacally, that is, its emergence from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular days. Brown.
 He is tempestuous in the Summer, when he rises heliacally;
 and rainy in the Winter, when he rises achronically. Dryden.
HELICAL. adv. [helice, Fr. from ἥλιος.] Spiral; with many circumvolutions.
 The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vertis at one end of it. Wilkins.
HELIOID Parabola, in mathematics, or the parabolick spiral, is a curve which arises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola's being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge towards the centre of the said circle. Harris.
HELIOCENTRIC. adj. [heliocentrique, Fr. ἥλιος, and κέντρον.]
 The heliocentric place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun, if our eye were fixed in its centre. Harris.
HELIOSCOPE. n.f. [helioscope, Fr. ἥλιος and σκοπεῖν.] A sort of telescope fitted so as to look on the body of the sun, without offence to the eyes. Harris.
HELIOTROPE. n.f. [ἥλιος and τροπέω; heliotrope, French;
heliotropium, Latin.] A plant that turns towards the sun;
 but more particularly the turnsol, or sun-flower.

HEL

'Tis a common observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night, and in cloudy weather.
Government of the Tongue.
HE'ISPHERICAL. adj. [helix and sphere.]
 The helispherical line is the rhomb line in navigation, and is so called because on the globe it winds round the pole spi-rally, and still comes nearer and nearer to it, but cannot terminate in it. Harris.
HE'LIX. n.f. [helice, Fr. ἥλιος.] A spiral line; a circumvolution.
 Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the certain quantity of water which every helix does contain.
Wilkins's Dadalus.
HELL. n.f. [hell, Saxon.]
 1. The place of the devil and wicked souls.
 For it is a knell
 That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. Shakef. Macbeth.
 If a man were a porter of hell gates, he should have old turning the key. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 Let none admire
 That riches grow in hell; that soil may best Deserve the precious bane. Milton.
 Hell's black tyrant trembled to behold
 The glorious light he forfeited of old. Cowley.
 2. The place of separate souls, whether good or bad.
 I will go down to my son mourning to hell. Gen. vi. 35.
 He descended into hell. Apstles Creed.

 took me. Psaln xviii. 4.
 4. The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.
 Then couples three be straight allotted there;
 They of both ends the middle two do fly;
 The two that in mid-place, hell called were,
 Must strive with waiting foot, and watching eye,
 To catch of them, and them to hell to bear,
 That they, as well as they, hell may supply. Sidney.
 5. The place into which the taylor throws his threads.
 This trusty squire, he had, as well
 As the bold Trojan knight, seen hell;
 Not with a counterfeit'd pass
 Of golden bough, but true gold lace. Hudibras, p. i.
 In Covent-garden did a taylor dwell,
 Who might deserve a place in his own hell. King's Cookery.
 6. The infernal powers.
 Much danger first, much did he sustain,
 While Saul and hell crost his strong fate in vain. Cowley.
 7. It is used in composition by the old writers more than by the modern.
HELL-BLACK. adj. Black as hell.
 The sea, with such a storm as his bare head
 In hell-black night endur'd, would have boil'd up,
 And quench'd the stelled fires. Shakespeare, King Lear.
HELL-BRED. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.
 Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
 With soul enfolded fmoak and flashing fire,
 The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies. Fairy Queen.
HELL-BROTH. n.f. [hell and broth.] A composition boiled up for infernal purposes.
 Adder's fork, and blind worm's stings,

 For a charm of pow'rful trouble,
 Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
HELL-DOOMED. adj. [hell and doom.] Consigned to hell.
 And reckon't thou thyself with spirits of heav'n,
 Flatt'ring don't and breath't defiance here and scorn,
 Where I reign king? Milton's Paradise Lost, l. iii.
HELL-GOVERNED. adj. Directed by hell.
 Earth gape open wide and eat him quick,
 As thou do't swallow up this good king's blood,
 Which his hell-govern'd arm hath butcher'd. Shak. R. III.
HELL-HATED. adj. Abhorred like hell.
 Back do I to'se these treasons to thy head,
 With the hell-hated lie o'erwhelm thy heart. Shak. K. Lear.
HELL-HAUNTED. adj. [hell and haunt.] Haunted by the devil.
 Pierce Osmond clos'd me in the bleeding bark,
 And bid me stand exposed to the bleak winds,
 And Winter's storms, and heav'n's inclemency,
 Bound to the fate of this hell-haunted grove. Dryden.
HELL-BOUND. n.f. [helle puns, Saxon.]
 1. Dogs of hell.
 Thou had'st a Clarence too, and Richard kill'd him:
 From forth the kennel of thy womb hath crept
 A hell-bound, that doth hunt us all to death. Shakespeare, R. III.
 Now the hell-bound with superior speed
 Had reach'd the dame, and, fast'ning on her side,
 The ground with issuing streams of purple dy'd. Dryden.
 2. Agent of hell.
 I call'd

HEL

I call'd
 My hell-bound to lick up the draff, and filth,
 Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed.
 On what was pure. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. x.
HELL-KITE. n.f. [hell and kite.] Kite of infernal breed. The term hell prefixed to any word notes detestation.
 All my pretty ones?
 Did you say all? What, all? Oh, hell-kite! all?
 What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
 At one fell swoop? Shakespeare, Macbeth.
HELLEBORE. n.f. [helleborus, Latin.] Christmas flower.
 It hath a digitated leaf: the flower consists of several leaves placed orbicularly, and expanding in form of a rose: in the centre of the flower rises the pointal, encompassed about the base with several little horns between the chives and petals, which turn to a fruit, in which the membranaceous husks are gathered into a little head, ending in an horn, opening longwise, and full of roundish or oval seeds. Miller.
HELLEBORE White. n.f. [veratrum, Latin.] A plant.
 The flower is naked, consisting of six leaves, expanding in form of a rose: in the middle arises the pointal, surrounded by six threads, which turn to a fruit; in which three membranaceous sheaths are gathered into a little head, and are full of oblong seeds resembling a grain of wheat, and compassed by a leafy wing. Miller.

 person. Garth.
 2. To bring a supply.
 Some, wanting the talent to write, made it their care that the actors should help out where the mules failed. Rymer.
HELP. n.f. [from the verb; hulpe, Dutch.]
 1. Assistance; aid; support; succour.
 Muleasses, despairing to recover the city, hardly escaped his enemies hands by the good help of his uncle. Kneller.
 He

HEM

He may be beholden to experience and acquired notions, where he thinks he has not the least help from them. Locke.
So great is the stupidity of some of those, that they may have no sense of the help administered to them. Smalridge.
2. That which forwards or promotes.
Coral is in use as an help to the teeth of children. Bacon.
3. That which gives help.
Though these contrivances increase the power, yet they proportionably protract the time: that which by such helps one man may do in a hundred days, may be done by the immediate strength of a hundred men in one day. Wilkins.
Virtue is a friend and an help to nature; but it is vice and luxury that destroys it, and the diseases of intemperance are the natural product of the sins of intemperance. South.
Another help St. Paul himself affords us towards the attaining the true meaning contained in his epistles. Locke.
4. Remedy.
There is no help for it, but he must be taught accordingly to comply with that faulty way of writing. Holder on Speech.
HELPER. n. f. [from help.]
1. An assistant; an auxiliary; an aider; one that helps or assists.
There was not any left, nor any helper for Israel. 2 Kings.
We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow helpers to the truth. 3 Jo. viii.
It is impossible for that man to despair who remembers that his helper is omnipotent. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.
2. One that administers remedy.
Compassion, the mother of tears, is not always a mere idle spectator, but an helper oftentimes of evils. More.
3. A supernumerary servant.
I live in the corner of a vast unfurnished house: my family consists of a steward, a groom, a helper in the stable, a footman, and an old maid. Swift to Pope.
4. One that supplies with any thing wanted.
Heaven
Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dower,
As it hath fated her to be my motive
And helper to a husband. Shak. All's well that ends well.
HELPLESS. adj. [help and full.]
1. Useful; that which gives assistance.
Let's fight with gentle words,
'Till time lend friends, and friends their helpful swords. Sh.
He orders all the succours which they bring;
The helpful and the good about him run,
And form an army. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.
2. Wholesome; salutary.
A skilful chymist can as well, by separation of visible elements, draw helpful medicines out of poison, as poison out of the most healthful herbs. Raleigh's History of the World.
HELPLESS. adj. [from help.]
1. Wanting power to succour one's self.
One dire fiend
Close by the board the prince's main-mast bore;
All three now helpless by each other lie. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.
Let our enemies rage and persecute the poor and the helpless;
but let it be our glory to be pure and peaceable. Rogers.
2. Wanting support or assistance.
How shall I then your helpless fame defend?
'Twill then be infamy to seem your friend. Pope.
3. Irremediable; admitting no help.
Such helpless harms it's better hidden keep,
Than rip up grief, where it may not avail. Fairy Queen.
4. Unsupplied; void.
Naked he lies, and ready to expire,
Helpless of all that human wants require. Dryden.
HELPLESSLY. adv. [from helpless.] Without succour; without ability.
HELPLESSNESS. n. f. [from helpless.] Want of succour; want of ability.
HELTER-SKELTER. adv. [As Skinner fancies, from peolreen yceabo, the darkness of hell; hell, says he, being a place of confusion.] In a hurry; without order; tumultuously.
Sir John, I am thy Pistol, and thy friend;
And helter-skelter have I rode to England,
And tidings do I bring. Shakespeare's Henry V.
He had no sooner turned his back but they were at it helter-skelter, throwing books at one another's heads. L'Estrange.
HELVE. n. f. [help, Saxon.] The handle of an axe.
The flipping of an axe from the helve, whereby another is slain, was the work of God himself. Raleigh's History.
TO HELVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit with a helve or handle.
HEM. n. f. [hem, Saxon.]
1. The edge of a garment doubled and sewed to keep the threads from spreading.
Rowlers must be made of even cloth, white and gentle, without hem, seam, or thread hanging by. Wise man.
2. [Hemmen, Dutch.] The noise uttered by a sudden and violent expiration of the breath.
I would try if I could cry hem, and have him. Shakespeare.
He loves to clear his pipes in good air, and is not a little pleased with any one who takes notice of the strength which he still exerts in his morning hems. Addison's Spectator.

3. interject. Hem! [Latin.]
TO HEM. v. a.
1. To clothe the edge of cloth by a hem or double border sewed together.
2. To border; to edge.
All the skirt about

Along the shoar of silver streaming Thames, Whose rusky bank, the which his river hems. Spenser.
3. To enclose; to environ; to confine; to shut.
So of either side, stretching itself in a narrow length, was it hemmed in by woody hills, as if indeed nature had meant therein to make a place for beholders. Sidney, b. ii.
What lets us then the great Jerusalem
With valiant squadrons round about to hem. Fairfax, b. i.
Why, Neptune, hast thou made us stand alone,
Divided from the world for this, say they;
Hem'd in to be a spoil to tyranny,
Leaving affliction hence no way to fly? Daniel's Civ. War.
I hurry me in haste away,
And find his honour in a pound,
Hem'd by a triple circle round,
Chequer'd with ribbons, blue and green. Pope.
TO HEM. v. n. [hemmen, Dutch.] To utter a noise by violent expulsion of the breath.
HEMICRANY. n. f. [ἡμισυ, half, and κρανιον, the skull, or head.] A pain that affects only one part of the head at a time. Quincy.

HEMISPHERE. n. f. [ἡμισφαίριον; hemisphere, French.] The half of a globe when it is supposed to be cut through its centre in the plane of one of its greatest circles.
That place is earth, the seat of man; that light
His day, which else, as the other hemisphere, Night would invade. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
God saw the light was good,
And light from darkness by the hemisphere Divided. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.
A hill
Of Paradise, the highest from whose top
The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken Stretch'd out to the amplest reach of prospect lay. Miln. P. L.
The sun is more powerful in the northern hemisphere, and in the apogee; for therein his motion is slower. Brown.
In open prospect nothing bounds our eye,
Until the earth seems join'd unto the sky;
So in this hemisphere our utmost view
Is only bounded by our king and you. Dryden.
HEMISPHERICAL. adj. [from hemisphere.] Half round;
HEMISPHERICK. adj. containing half a globe.
The thin film of water swells above the surface of the water it swims on, and commonly constitutes hemispherical bodies with it. Boyle.
A pyrites, placed in the cavity of another of an hemispherical figure, in much the same manner as an acorn in its cup. Woodward on Effluvia.
HEMISTICK. n. f. [ἡμιστίχον; hemistich, Fr.] Half a verse.
He broke off in the hemistich, or midst of the verse; but seized, as it were, with a divine fury, he made up the latter part of the hemistich. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
HEMLOCK. n. f. hemlock, Saxon.] An herb.
The leaves are cut into many minute segments: the petals of the flower are bifid, heart-shaped, and unequal: the flower is succeeded by two short channelled seeds. One sort is sometimes used in medicine, though it is noxious; but the hemlock of the ancients, which was such deadly poison, is generally supposed different. Miller.
He was met even now,
As mad as the vexed sea, singing aloud;
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
With hardocks, hemlock. Shakespeare, King Lear.
We cannot with certainty affirm, that no man can be nourished by wood or stones, or that all men will be poisoned by hemlock. Locke.
HEMORRHAGE. n. f. [αιμορραγία; hemorrhagie, French.] A HEMORRHAGE. n. f. violent flux of blood. Ray.

HEN

Emboist upon the field, a battle flood
Of leeches, spouting hemorrhoidal blood. Garth's Dispensat.
HEMP. n. f. [hemp, Saxon; hampe, Dutch.] A fibrous plant of which coarse linen and ropes are made.
It hath digitated leaves opposite to one another: the flowers have no visible petals; it is male and female in different plants. It is propagated in the rich fenny parts of Lincolnshire in great quantities for its bark, which is useful for cordage, cloth, &c. and the seed affords an oil used in medicine. Miller.
Let gallows go for dog; let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate. Shakespeare, Hen. V.
Hemp and flax are commodities that deserve encouragement, both for their usefulness and profit. Mortimer's Husbandry.
HEMP. n. f. A plant.
The common hemp agrimony is found wild by ditches and sides of rivers. Miller.
HEMPEN. adj. [from hemp.] Made of hemp.
In foul reproach of knighthood's fair degree,
About his neck a hempen rope he wears. Fairy Queen, b. i.
Behold
Upon the hempen tackle ship-boys climbing. Shak. Hen. V.
Ye shall have a hempen candle then, and the help of a hatchet. Shakespeare's Henry VI, p. iii.
I twich'd his dangling garter from his knee;
He wist not when the hempen string I drew. Gay.
HEN. n. f. [henne, Saxon and Dutch; han, German, a cock.]
1. The female of a house-fowl.
2. The female of any land-fowl.
The peacock, pheasant, and goldfinch cocks have glorious colours; the hens have not.
Whilst the hen bird is covering her eggs, the male generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough within her hearing, and by that means diverts her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Addison's Spectator.
The wild duck hence
O'er the rough mofs, and o'er the trackless waste
The heath hen flutters. Thomson's Spring.

HEN-HEARTED. adj. [hen and heart.] Dastardly; cowardly; like a hen. A low word.
HEN-PECKED. adj. [hen and pecked.] Governed by the wife.
A stepdame too I have, a cur'd she,
Who rules my hen-peck'd fire, and orders me. Dryd. Virgil.
The neighbours reported that he was hen-pecked, which was impossible, by such a mild-spirited woman as his wife. Arbutnot.
HEN-ROOST. n. f. [hen and roost.] The place where the poultry rest.
Many a poor devil stands to a whipping post for the pilfering of a silver spoon, or the robbing of a hen-roost. L'Estr.
Her house is frequented by a company of rogues, whom she encourages to rob his hen-roosts. Swift.
If a man prosecutes gipsies with severity, his hen-roost is sure to pay for it. Addison's Spectator.
They oft have fall'd out to pillage
The hen-roosts of some peaceful village. Tickell.
HENS-EET. n. f. A kind of plant. Ainsworth.
HENBANE. n. f. [hyoscyamus, Latin.] A plant.
The leaves are soft and hairy, growing alternately upon the branches: the cup of the flower is short, bell-shaped, and divided into five segments: the flower consists of one leaf, the bottom part of which is tubelose, but is expanded at the top, and divided into five segments, having five obtuse stamina: the fruit, which is inclosed within the calyx, resembles a pot with a cover to it, and is divided by a partition into two cells, which contain many small seeds. It is very often found growing upon the sides of banks and old dunghills. This is a very poisonous plant. Miller.
That to which old Socrates was cur'd,
Or henbane juice, to swell 'em 'till they burst. Dryden.
HENBIT. n. f. A plant.
In a scarcity in Silefia a rumour was spread of its raining millet-seed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit. Dorham's Phys. Theology.
HENCE. adv. or interj. [hence, Saxon; hennet, old English.]
1. From this place to another.
Discharge my followers; let them hence away,
From Richard's night to Bolinbroke's fair day. Shak. R. II.
Th' Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy; will not drive us hence. Milton's P. L.
A fullen prudence drew thee hence
From noise, fraud and impertinence. Roscommon.
2. Away; to a distance.
Be not found here; hence with your little ones. Shak. Macb.
Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse. Milton.
3. At a distance; in other place.
Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth? Shakespeare.
All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are infixed to this action. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
4. From this time; in the future.

HEN

He who can reason well to-day about one sort of matters, cannot at all reason to-day about others, though perhaps a year hence he may. Locke.
Let not posterity a thousand years hence look for truth in the voluminous annals of pedants. Arbutnot.
5. For this reason; in consequence of this.
Hence perhaps it is, that Solomon calls the fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom. Tillotson, Sermon i.
6. From this cause; from this ground.
By too strong a projectile motion the aliment tends to putrefaction: hence may be deduced the force of exercise in helping digestion. Arbutnot on Aliments.
7. From this source; from this original; from this store.
My Flora was my fun; for as One fun, so but one Flora was:
All other faces borrowed hence
Their light and grace, as stars do thence. Suckling.
8. From hence is a vitious expression, which crept into use even among good authors, as the original force of the word hence was gradually forgotten.
An ancient author prophesied from hence,
Behold on Latian shores a foreign prince!
From the same parts of heav'n his navy stands,
To the same parts on earth. Dryden's Æn. b. vii.
TO HENCE. v. a. [from the adverb.] To send off; to dispatch to a distance. Obsolete.
Go, bawling cur! thy hungry maw go fill
On yon foul flock, belonging not to me;
With that his dog he hent'd, his flock he curst. Sidney.
HENCEFORTH. adv. [henceforth, Saxon.] From this time forward.
Thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be earls. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never, oh never, shall I see more joy. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Happier thou may'st be, worthier can'st not be;
Taste this, and be henceforth among the gods,
Thyself a goddess. Milton's Par. Lost, b. v.
I never from thy side henceforth will stray,
'Till day droop. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.
If we treat gallant soldiers in this fort,
Who then henceforth to our defence will come? Dryden.
HENCEFORTHWARD. adv. [hence and forward.] From this time to all futurity.
Henceforward will I bear Upon my target three fair shining furs. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
Henceforward it shall be treason for any that calls me other than lord Mortimer. Shakespeare's Henry VI, p. ii.
Pardon, I beseech you;
Henceforward I am ever rul'd by you. Shak. Romeo and Jul.
The royal academy will admit henceforward only such who are endowed with good qualities. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
HENCHMAN. n. f. [hynch, a servant, and man, Skinner; hengst, a horse, and man, Spelman.] A page; an attendant. Obsolete.
Why should Titania cross her Oberon?
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my henchman. Shakespeare's Midw. Night's Dream.
Three henchmen were for every knight assign'd,
All in rich livery clad, and of a kind. Dryden.
TO HEND. v. a. [hentan, Saxon, from henda, low Latin, which seems borrowed from hand or hend, Teutonic.]
1. To seize; to lay hold on.
With that the sergeants hent the young man stout,
And bound him likewise in a worthless chain. Fairfax, b. ii.
2. To croud; to surround. Perhaps the following passage is corrupt, and should be read hemmed.
The generous and gravest citizens
Have hent the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering. Shakespeare, Meas. for Measure.
HENDECAGON. n. f. [ἑνδεκά and γωνία.] A figure of eleven sides or angles.
HEPATICAL. adj. [hepaticus, Latin; hepaticque, French, from hepatick.] adj. [ἥπαρ.] Belonging to the liver.
If the evacuated blood be florid, it is stomach blood; if red and copious, it's hepatick. Harvey on Consumptions.
The cystick gall is thick, and intensely bitter; the hepatick gall is more fluid, and not so bitter. Arbutnot on Aliments.
HEPS. n. f. Hawthorn-berries, commonly written hips. Ainsw.
In hard Winters there is observed great plenty of heps and haws, which preserve the small birds from starving. Bacon.

HEPTARCHY. n. f. [heptarchie, Fr. ἑπτά and ἀρχή.] A seven-fold government.
In the Saxon heptarchy I find little noted of arms, albeit the Germans, of whom they descended, used shields. Camden.
England began not to be a people, when Alfred reduced it into

HER

into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The next returning planetary hour

Of Mars, who shad'd the heptarchy of pow'r,

His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent. Dryden.

HER. pron. [hepa, hej, in Saxon, flood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman:
About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth. Shakespeare. As you like it.

Still new favourites she chose,

'Till up in arms my passion rose,

And cast away her yoke. Cowley.

One month, three days, and half an hour,

Judith held the low reign pow'r;

Wond'rous beautiful her face;

But so weak and small her wit,

That she to govern were unfit,

And so Susanna took her place. Cowley.

2. The oblique case of she.

Her sceptre so fantastically borne,

That fear attends her not. Shakespeare's Henry V.

She cannot seem deform'd to me,

And I would have her seem to others so. Cowley.

The moon arose clad o'er in light,

With thousand stars attending on her train;

Should I be left, and thou be lost, the sea,

That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryden.

HERS. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms are hers.

This pride of hers,

Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her. Shakespeare.

Thine own unworthiness,

Will fill that thou art mine not hers confels. Cowley.

Some secret charm did all her acts attend,

And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend. Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,

Indeed to save a crown, not hers, but yours. Dryden.

HERALD. n. f. [herault, French; herald, German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace:

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my book,

For strict degrees of rank or title look;

'Tis 'gainst the manners of an epigram,

And I a poet here, no herald am. Ben. Johnson's Epigrams.

When time shall serve, let but the herald cry,

And I'll appear again. Shakespeare. King Lear.

After my death I with no other herald,

No other speaker of my living actions,

But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shakespeare. Hen. VIII.

Embassador of peace, if peace you chuse;

Or herald of a war, if you refuse. Dryden's Ind. Emperor.

Please thy pride, and search the herald's roll,

Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree. Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinger.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,

When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send

Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn.

To herald. A word not used. Shakespeare.

We are sent

To give thee from our royal master thanks;

Only to herald thee into his fight,

Not pay thee. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

HERALDRY. n. f. [heraulderie, French, from herald.]

1. The art or office of a herald.

I am writing of heraldry. Peacham.

Grant her, besides, of noble blood that ran

In ancient veins, ere heraldry began. Dryden's Juvenal.

'Twas no false heraldry, when madness drew

Her pedigree from those who too much knew. Denham.

2. Blazonry.

Metals may blazon common beauties; she Makes pearls and planets humble heraldry. Cleaveland.

HERB. n. f. [herbe, French; herba, Latin.]

HERB. are those plants whose stalks are soft, and have no thing woody in them; as grass and hemlock. Locke.

In such a night

Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs

That did renew old Aton. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.

With sweet-swalling herbs

Espos'd Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed. Milton.

Unhappy, from whom still conceal'd does lie

Of herbs and roots the harmless luxury. Cowley.

If the leaves are of chief use to us, then we call them herbs; as sage and mint. Watts's Logic.

HER

Herb eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbustnet on Aliments.

HERB. Christ-pher, or Bane-berries. n. f. A plant.

The flower consists of five leaves, placed orbicularly in form of a rose: in its centre arises the ovary, which becomes a soft fruit or berry of an oval shape, and filled with seeds in a double row, which for the most part adhere together. Miller.

HERBA/CROUS. adj. [from herba, Latin.]

1. Belonging to herbs.

Ginger is the root of neither tree nor trunk; but an herba- cous plant, resembling the water flower-de-luce. Brown.

One of the number. Addison's Cat.

Run to towns, to herd with knaves and fools,

And undistinguish'd pass among the crowd. Walsh.

To HERD. v. a. To throw or put into an herd.

The rest,

However great we are, honest and valiant,

Are herd with the vulgar. Ben. Johnson's Catiline.

HERDGROOM. n. f. [herd and groom.] A keeper of herds.

But who shall judge the wager won or lost?

That shall yonder herdgroom, and none other,

Which over the poult hitherward doth post. Spenser.

HERDSMAN. n. f. [herd and man.] One employed in tending herds: formerly, an owner of herds.

A herdsman rich, of much account was he,

In whom no evil did reign, or good appear. Sidney.

And you, enchantment,

Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou

These rural latches to his entrance open,

I will devise a death cruel for thee. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

Search themselves know how to hold

A sheephook, or have learn'd ought else the least

That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs. Milton.

There oft the Indian herdsman, flunning heat,

Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds

At loop-holes cut through thickest shade. Milt. Par. Lost.

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear

Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.

The herdsman, round

The cheerful fire, provoke his health in goblets crown'd.

Dryden's Virgil's Georgicks.

When their herdsman could not agree, they parted by consent. Locke.

HERE. adv. [heer, Saxon; hier, Dutch.]

1. In this place.

Before thy here approach,

Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,

All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

I, upon my frontiers here,

Keep residence. Milton.

Here nature first begins

Her farthest verge. Milton.

How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,

While he his second misery suffers here!

To-day is ours, we have it here. Cowley.

2. In the present state.

Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.

Then here's for earnest:

'Tis finish'd, and the dust that yet remains

Is but the native honour of the wood. Dryden's K. A. thow.

However, friend, here's to the king, one cries;

HER

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and dissoluty. King Charles.
HERESARCH. n. f. [heresarchus, French; ἡγεμὸν and ἡγεμῶν.] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of heretics.

The pope declared him not only an heretic, but an heresarch. Stillingfleet.

HERETICK. n. f. [heretique, Fr. hérétique.] One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholic church.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold
 Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands,
 In him that was of late an heretick,
 As firm as faith. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretick or schismatick be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread
 Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.

Bellarmin owns, that he has quoted a heretick instead of a father.

When a Papist uses the word heretick, he generally means Protestants; when a Protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errors.

HERETICAL. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who in their opinion not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker, b. iii. f. 1.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Decay of Piety.

HERETICALLY. adv. [from heretical.] With heresy.

HERETO. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERETOFORE. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly; anciently.

Lord Amphialus, said she, I have long desired to know you heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love not your person. Sidney.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South's Sermons.

We now can form no more
 Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HERETO. adv. [here and unto.] To this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man hereto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that who so assenteth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hooker, b. v. f. 22.

Agreeable hereto might not be amiss to make children, as soon as they are capable of it, often to tell a story of any thing they know. Locke.

HERWITH. adv. [here and with.] With this.

You, fair sir, be not herewith dismayed,
 But constant keep the way in which ye stand. Pai. Queen.

HERWITH the cattle of Fame was suddenly surpris'd by the Scots. Hayward.

HERIOT. n. f. [Jeregius, Saxon.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, commonly the best thing in the landholder's possession.

This he detains from the ivy; for he should be the true possessor of the ivy, but the olive disposeth with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year. Huvel's Vocal Forest.

Though thou consume but to renew,
 Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due. Cleaveland.

I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a purse to you. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England. Hale's Common Law.

HERITAGE. n. f. [heritage, French.]

1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.

Let us our father's heritage divide. Hubbard's Tale.

He considers that his proper home and heritage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this with the indifference of a guest that carries but a day. Rogers's Sermons.

2. [In divinity.] The people of God.

O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage. Com. Pr.

HERMAPHRODITE. n. f. [hermaprodite, French, from ἑρμῆς and ἀφροδίτη.] An animal uniting two sexes.

Man and wife make but one right Canonical hermaprodite. Cleaveland.

Monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness hermaprodites. Arbutn. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.

HERMAPHRODITICAL. adj. [from hermaprodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaproditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HERMETICAL. adj. [from Hermes, or Mercury, the imagined inventor of chymistry; hermetique, French.] Chymical.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass 'till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together. Quincy.

The tube was closed at one end with diachylon, instead of an hermetical seal. Boyle.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chymick art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels close covered with paper; and not only so, but in vessels covered with fine lawn, so as to admit the air and keep out the insects: no living thing was ever produced there.

HERMIT. n. f. [hermite, French; contracted from eremita, ἐρημίτης.] 1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A wither'd hermit, five-score Winters worn,
 Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shakespeare.

You were pleas'd to lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as a hermit rather than a courtier can render. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

He had been duke of Savoy, and after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot. Addison on Italy.

Come, inspiration, from thy hermit seat,
 By mortals seldom found. Thomson's Summer.

2. A headman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.

For those of old,
 And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
 We rest your hermit. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

HERMITAGE. n. f. [hermitage, French.] The cell or habitation of a hermit.

By that painful way they pass
 Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;
 On top whereof a sacred chapel was,
 And oke a little hermitage thereby. Fairy Queen, b. i.

Go with speed
 To some forlorn and naked hermitage, Remote from all the pleasures of the world. Shakespeare.

And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may fit and rightly spell
 Of every star that heav'n doth shew,
 And every herb that sips the dew. Milton.

About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermitage: it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks. Addison on Italy.

HERMITESS. n. f. [from hermit.] A woman retired to devotion.

HERMITICAL. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

HERMODACTYL. n. f. [ἑρμῶδαι and δακτύλος.] A determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots, which we have, are a gentle purge; but they are now little used. Hall's Mat. Med.

HERN. n. f. [Contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, hern, and bittern. Peacocks on Drawing.

HERNHILL. n. f. [hern and hill.] An herb.

HERNIA. n. f. [Latin.] Any kind of rupture, diversified by the name of the part affected.

A hernia would certainly succeed. Wise's Surgery.

HERO. n. f. [heros, Latin; ἥρως.] 1. A man eminent for bravery.

In which were held, by sad decease,
 Heroes and herosities. Chapman's Odyssey.

I king of heroes and of kings,
 In mighty numbers mighty things. Cavalier.

HEROES in animated marble frown.
 In this view he ceases to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

These are thy honours, not that here thy built
 Is mix'd with heros, or with kings thy dust. Pope.

Is mix'd with heros, or with kings thy dust. Pope.

Joy thy wish'd approach to see.

2. A man of the highest class in any respect.

HEROESS. n. f. [from heros; herois, Latin.] A heroine; a female hero.

In which were held, by sad decease,
 Heroes and herosities. Chapman's Odyssey.

HEROES and herosities.

HEROICAL.

HER

HEROICAL. adj. [from hero.] Besitting an hero; heroic.

Mufidorus was famous over all Asia for his heroical enterprises. Sidney, b. ii.

Though you have courage in an heroical degree, I ascribe it to you as your second attribute. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

HEROICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of an hero; suitably to an hero.

Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney, b. ii.

Free from all meanings, whether good or bad;
 And, in one word, heroically mad. Dryden.

HEROICK. adj. [from hero; heraïque, French.]

1. Productive of heroes.

Bolingbroke
 From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree, Being but the fourth of that heroick line. Shakespeare. Hen. VI.

2. Noble; suitable to an hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.

Not that which justly gives heroick name
 To person, or to poem. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

Verse makes heroick virtue live,
 But you can life to verses give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes.

Methinks heroick poetry, 'till now,
 Like some fantastick fairy land did flow. Cowley.

I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and success of a most just and necessary war. Dryden's Ann. Mirab. Preface.

An heroick poem is the greatest which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

HEROICALLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to an hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.

Samson hath quit himself
 Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
 A life heroick. Milton's Agonistes.

HEROINE. n. f. [from heros; heroine, French.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heros.

But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,
 New-strung, and stiffer bent her softer soul;
 The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
 Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

Then shall the British stage
 More noble characters expose to view,
 And draw her finish'd heroines from you. Addison.

HEROISM. n. f. [herosisme, French.] The qualities or character of an hero.

If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Braune's Notes to the Odyssey.

HERON. n. f. [heron, French.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish.

So lords, with sport of flag and heron full,
 Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull.
 The heron, when the soareth high, sheweth winds. Bacon.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hern.

The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,
 Who terror bears upon his soaring wing;
 Let them on high the frighted hern survey,
 And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay.

HERONRY. n. f. [from heron; commonly pronounced hern.]

HERONSHAW. n. f. [ry.] A place where herons breed.

They carry their load to a large heronry above three miles.

HERPES. n. f. [ἑρπης.] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pustularis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and exedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers, if not timely taken care of. Quincy.

A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the access of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes exedens. Wise's Surgery.

HERRING. n. f. [haring, French; haring, Saxon.] A small sea-fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, herring, mackerel, and cod. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Buy my herring fresh.

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers.

How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears;
 If so, my eyes are often wash'd than hers. Shakespeare.

Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers;
 For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.

I see her rowling eyes;
 And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries;
 With words not hers, and more than human found,
 She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Rowson.

HERSE. n. f. [herse, low Latin; supposed to come from herse, to praise.]

1. A temporary monument raised over a grave.

HET

2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.

When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herse,
 Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Rowson.

Crowds of dead in decent pomp are born;
 Their friends attend the herse, the next relations mourn. Dryden's Virgil's Georg. b. iv.

On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
 And frequent herse shall besiege your gates. Pope.

To HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into an herse.

I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would she were herse'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

The Grecians spitefully drew from the darts the corse,
 And herse'd it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman's Iliad.

The house is herse'd about with a black wood,
 Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree:
 Each flower's a pregnant poison, try'd and good;
 Each herb a plague. Craftsman.

HERSELF. pronoun. The female personal pronoun, in the oblique cases reciprocal.

The jealous o'er worn widow and herself,
 Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
 Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakespeare. Rich. III.

The more she looks, the more her fears increase,
 At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryden.

HERSELF. adj. [herse and like.] Funereal; suitable to funerals.

Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herse-like airs as carols. Bacon.

To HERSE. v. a. [herse, Saxon; to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.

Thenot, now nis the time of merrymake,
 Nor Pan to herse, nor with love to play;
 Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,
 Or Summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser's Past.

Thenceforth it firmly was established,
 And for Apollo's honour highly herse'd. Fairy Queen.

But were thy years green as now be mine,
 Then wouldst thou learn to carol of love,
 And herse with hymns thy late's glove. Spenser.

HERSITANCE. n. f. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense.

The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped. Boyle.

Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to shew that they believed their own reasonings. Athenbury's Sermons.

To HERSITATE. v. a. [hesito, Latin; hesiter, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.

A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Braune's Notes on the Iliad.

Willings to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
 Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
 Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
 A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HESITATION. n. f. [from hesitate.]

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.

I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each peruser. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Intermision of speech; want of volubility.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HESIT. n. f. [hesit, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction.

If thou be the most kind preserver
 Of living wights, the sovereign lord of all,
 How falls it then, that, with thy furious fervour,
 Thou dost afflict the not deserver,
 As him that doth thy lovely hesits despise. Spenser.

To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,
 Refusing her grand hesits. Shakespeare's Tempest.

HETEROCLITE. n. f. [heteroclite, Fr. heteroclitum, Latin; ἑτεροκλίτης and κλίμα.]

1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect, or otherwise. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

The heteroclite nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Watts.

2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.

HETEROCLITICAL. adj. [from heteroclite.] Deviating from the common rule.

Of sins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HETERODOX. adj. [heterodoxe, French; ἑτεροδοξία and δοξα.] Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.

Partiality

HEX

Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar, in others to heterodox tenets. Locke.
HETERODOX. n. f. An opinion peculiar.
 Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated unto the loadstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HETEROGENEAL. adj. [heterogene, French; heteros and genos.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.
 Let the body adjacent and ambient be not commaterial, but merely heterogeneous towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon's Natural History.
 The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whole rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar. Newton's Opt.
HETEROGENEITY. n. f. [heterogenēitē, Fr. from heterogeneous.] 1. Opposition of nature; contrariety or dissimilitude of qualities. 2. Opposite or dissimilar part.
 Guaiacum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequestered into ashes and foot; whereas the same wood, distilled in a retort, does yield far other heterogeneities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water and charcoal. Boyle.
HETEROGENEOUS. adj. [heteros and genos.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.
 I have with great care observed the condition of such heterogeneous bodies, which I found immerged and included in the mists of this fundstone. Woodward.
HETEROGENEOUS. n. f. [heteros and genos.] Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the Tropick fall at noon always to the North.
 To HEW. v. a. part. hewn or hewed. [hæpan, Saxon; hauwen, Dutch.] 1. To cut with an edged instrument; to hack.
 Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
 And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain. Spenser.
 I had purpose
 Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
 Or lose my arm for't. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends. Hayward.
 One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Hayward.
 2. To chop; to cut.
 Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:
 Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint. Shakespeare.
 He from deep wells with engines water drew,
 And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryd. Fables.
 3. To fell, as with an axe.
 He that depends
 Upon your favours, twines with fins of lead,
 And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
 Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
 Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night. Shakespeare's H. VI.
 Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
 And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.
 He from the mountain hewing timber tall,
 Began to build a vessel of huge bulk. Milton's Parad. Lost.
 We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
 And hew down all that would oppose our passage. Addison.
 4. To form or shape with an axe.
 Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed him out a sepulchre on high. Is. xxii. 16.
 Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformation by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. K. Ch.
 This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks. Addison on Italy.
 Next unto bricks are preferred the square hewn stone. Mort.
 5. To form laboriously.
 The gate was adamant; eternal frame!
 Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came,
 The labour of a god. Dryden's Fables.
 I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new. Pope to Swift.
HEWER. n. f. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.
 At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HEXAGON. n. f. [hexagone, French; hex and gonia.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.
HEXAGONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.
 As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal. Ray on the Creation.
HEXAGONY. n. f. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.
 When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonist, or hexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians? Bramb. against Hobbs.

HID

HEXAMETER. n. f. [hex and metron.] A verse of six feet.
 The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroic.
HEXANGULAR. adj. [hex and angulus, Latin.] Having six corners.
 Hexangular sprigs or shoots of crystal, of various faces, some clear, and others a little soiled. Woodward on Crystals.
HEXAPOD. n. f. [hex and podis.] An animal with six feet.
 I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America. Ray on the Creation.
HEXASTICH. n. f. [hex and stichos.] A poem of six lines.
HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation; the contrary to the Latin hei.
 Shadwell from the town retires,
 To bless the wood with peaceful lyric;
 Then hey for praise and panegyric. Prior.
HEYDAY. interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolic and exultation, and sometimes of wonder.
 Thou'lt say anon he is some kin to thee,
 Thou spend'st such heyday wit in praising him. Shakespeare.
 'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
 Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday! Hudibras, p. i.
HEYDAY. n. f. A frolic; wildness.
 At your age
 The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
 And waits upon the judgment. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
HEYDEGIVES. n. f. A wild frolic dance.
 But friendly fairies met with many graces,
 And light-foot nymphs can chase the ling'ring night
 With heydegives, and trimly trodden traces. Spenser.
HIA'TION. n. f. [from hio, Latin.] The act of gaping.
 Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open his mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HIA'TUS. n. f. [hiatus, Latin.] 1. An aperture; a breach.
 Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below open into and communicates with it. Woodward.
 2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.
 The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself. Pope.
HIBERNAL. adj. [hibernus, Latin.] Belonging to the Winter.
 This star should rather manifest its warming power in the Winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conversion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HICCUS DOCCUS. n. f. [corrupted, I fancy, from his est doctus, this or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.
 An old dull sot, who told the clock
 For many years at Bridewell dock,
 At Westminster and Hicks's hall,
 And hiccus doctus play'd in all;
 Where, in all governments and times,
 He had been both friend and foe to crimes. Hudibras, p. iii.
HICCOUGH. n. f. [hicken, Danish.] A convulsion of the stomach producing fobs.
 So by an abbey's skeleton of late
 I heard an echo supererogate
 Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
 As if she had the hicough o'er and o'er. Cleveland.

HIGGLE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology; probably corrupted from haggle.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain.
In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to biggle and dodge in the amends.

Bafe thou art!
To biggle thus for a few blows,
To gain thy knight an opulent spouse.

Why all this bigging with thy friend about such a pauntry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull?

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning.
HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY. adv. A cant word, corrupted from biggle, which denotes any confused mass, as higgledy carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGH. adj. [heah, Saxon; hoog, Dutch.]
1. Long upwards; rising above from the surface, or from the centre.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,
And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Their andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft.
High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd,
That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabric; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being.

3. Exalted in nature.
4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest.
O mortals! blind in fate, who never know
To bear high fortune, or endure the low.

HIGH-BLEST. adj. Supremely happy.
The good which we enjoy from heav'n descends;
But that from us ought should ascend to heav'n
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-bless'd, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem.

23. High-blown. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.
I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many Summers on a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride
At length broke under me, and now has left me,
Weary, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.

HIG

Lo! how the Norick plains
Rise billy, with large piles of slaughter'd knights. Phillips Hilly countries afford the most entertaining prospects, tho' aman would chuse to travel through a plain one. Addison HILT. n. f. [pile, Saxon, from heilan, to hold.] The handle of anything, particularly of a sword.
Now sits expectation in the air,
And hides a sword from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial; crowns and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry and his followers. Shakeſp. Henry V.
Take thou the hilt,
And when my face is cover'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the sword. Shakeſp. Julius Cæſar
Be his this sword, whose blade of braſs diſplays
A ruddy gleam; while hilt, a ſilver blaze. Pope's Odyſſey
HIM. [him, Saxon.]

Me he reſtor'd unto my office, and him he hang'd. Gen. xli.
2. Him was anciently uſed for it in a neutral ſenſe.
HIMSELF. pron. [him and ſelf.]
1. In the nominative the ſame as he, only more emphatical.
It was a ſparing ſpeech of the ancients to ſay, that a friend is another himſelf; for that a friend is far more than himſelf. Bacon
With ſhame remembers, while himſelf was one
Of the ſame herd, himſelf the ſame had done. Denham
2. In ancient authors it is uſed neutrally for itſelf.
She is advanc'd
Above the clouds as high as heav'n himſelf. Shakeſp.
3. In the oblique caſes it has a reciprocal ſignification.
I perceive it was not altogether your brother's evil diſpoſi-tion made him ſeek his death; but a provoking merit, ſet awork by a reprovable badneſs in himſelf. Shakeſp. K. Lear
4. It is ſometimes not reciprocal.
Nothing in nature can ſo peculiarly gratify the noble diſpoſitions of humanity, as for one man to ſee another ſo much himſelf as to ſigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to ſing his joys, and do and feel every thing by ſympathy. South

You minimus of hindring knot-graſs made ſ
If the alms were hinder'd only by intreaty, the hinderer is not tied to reſtitution, becauſe intreaty took not liberty away from the giver. Taylor's Rule of Living holy This objection hinders not but that the heroick action of ſome commander, enterpriſed for the Chriſtian cauſe, and executed happily, may be written. Dryden's Juv. Dedicat.
What hinders younger brothers, being fathers of families, from having the ſame right? Locke HINDER. adj. [from hind.] That which is in a poſition contrary to that of the face.

HIN

Theſe beaſts, fighting with any man, ſtand upon their hinder feet, and ſo this did, being ready to give me a ſhrewd embracement. Sidney, b. i.
As the hinder feet of the horſe ſtuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himſelf from ſliding off his back. Addiſon's Guardian HINDERANCE. n. f. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; ſtop; obſtruction.
False opinions, touching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent practices againſt the hinderances of them, and thoſe practices new opinions more pernicious than the firſt; yea, moſt extremely ſometimes oppoſite to the firſt. Hooker's Preface
They muſt be in every Chriſtian church the ſame, except mere impoſſibility of ſo having it be the hinderance. Hooker
What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done? Dryden's Duſſonoy
Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
One ſoul ſhould both inſpire, and neither prove His fellow's hind'rance in purſuit of love? Dryden
He muſt conquer all theſe difficulties, and remove all theſe hinderances out of the way that leads to juſtice. Arthurbury or obſtructs.

Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grow. May HINDERLING. n. f. [from hind or hinder.] A paltry, worthleſs, degenerate animal.
HINDMOST. adj. [This word ſeems to be leſs proper than hindmoſt.] Hindmoſt; laſt; in the rear.
He put the handmaids and their children foremoſt, and Leſh and her children after, and Rachel and Joſeph hindmoſt. Gen.
Like to an enter'd tide, they all ruſh by,
And leave you hindmoſt. Shakeſp. Troilus and Crefſida HINDMOST. adj. [hind and moſt.] The laſt; the laſt; that which comes in the rear.
'Tis not his wont to be the hindmoſt man,
Whate'er occaſion keeps him from us now. Shakeſp. H. VI.
He met thee by the way, and ſmote the hindmoſt of theſe, even all that were feeble behind. Deutr. xxv. 18.
Let him retire, betwixt two ages caſt,
The firſt of this, and hindmoſt of the laſt,
A loſing gameſter. Dryden's Aurenga. Prologue
The race by vigour, not by vaunts is won;
So take the hindmoſt, hell—he ſaid, and run. Pope
HINGE. n. f. [or hinge, from hangle or hang.]
1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.
At the gate
Of heav'n arriv'd, the gate ſelf-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning. Milton's Paraſiſt Loſt, b. v.
Then from the hinge their ſtrokes the gates divorce,
And where the way they cannot find, they force. Danham
Heav'n's imperious queen ſhot down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd. Dryden's Æn.
2. The cardinal points of the world, Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South.
If when the moon is in the hinge at Eaſt,
The birth breaks forward from its native reſt;
Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This ſtation gives. Creech's Manilius
And theſe being hinges of the world, create
New powers in ſtars. Creech's Manilius
3. A governing rule or principle.
The other hinge of puniſhment might turn upon a law, whereby all men, who did not marry by the age of five and twenty, ſhould pay the third part of their revenue. Temple
4. To be off the hinges. To be in a ſtate of irregularity and diſorder.
The man's ſpirit is out of order and off the hinges; and 'till that be put into its right frame, he will be perpetually diſ-quieted. Tillotſon, Sermon 4.
To HINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To furniſh with hinges.
2. To bend as an hinge.

HIS

To Hiss. v. a. [pycean, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing; to explode.

Every one will hiss him out of his disgrace. Euch. xxii. 1.

Men shall pursue with merited disgrace;

Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country chase. Sandys.

She would so shamefully fail in the last act, that, instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hissed off the stage. More.

I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.

Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hissed out of all the courts as ridiculous? Collier on Dueling.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.

Thy mother plays, and I

Play too; but so disgrac'd a part, whose issue

Will hiss me to my grave. Shakef. Winter's Tale.

Each minute teems a new one. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Hiss. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The voice of a serpent, and of some other animals.

2. Censure; expression of contempt used in theatres.

He heard

On all sides, from innumerable tongues,

A dismal universal hiss, the sound

Of public scorn! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.

Pierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears

Of hisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears. Pope's Dunciad.

Hiss. interj. [Of this word I know not the original: probably it may be a corruption of hush, hush it, hush it, hush it.] An exclamation commanding silence.

Hiss! Romeo, hiss! O for a falcon's voice,

To lure this tassel-gentle back again. Shakef. Rom. and Jul.

Mute silence hiss along!

'Lest Philomel will deign a song,

In her sweetest faddest plight,

Smoothing the rugged brow of night. Milton.

Hiss, hiss, says another that stood by, away, doctor; for here's a whole pack of dilmals coming. Swift.

HISTORIAN. n. f. [historicus, Latin; historien, French.] A writer of facts and events; a writer of history.

What thanks sufficient, or what recompence

Equal, have I to render thee, divine

Historian! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Addison's Freeholder.

Not added years on years my task could close,

The long historian of my country's woes. Pope's Odyssey.

HISTORICAL. adj. [historique, Fr. historicus, Latin.]

HISTORICK. adj. [from historicus, Latin.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiogra-pher. Spenser.

Here rising bold, the patriot's honest face;

There warriors frowning in historick bras. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.

In an historick relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

With equal justice and historick care,

Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historick.] In the manner of history; by way of narration.

The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person. Hooker, b. v.

When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we construe as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God?

After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him. Pope's Essay on Homer.

To HISTORIFY. v. a. [from history.] To relate; to record in history.

O, muse, glorify

Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me. Sidney, b. i.

The third age they term historicon; that is, such wherein matters have been more truly historified, and therefore may be believed. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 6.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. f. [historia and grapho; historiographes,

Fr.] An historian; a writer of history.

Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these knights several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiogra-

pher. Spenser.

What poor ideas must strangers conceive of these persons who have been famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers?

Addison's Freeholder, No. 35.

I put the journals of all transactions into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs.

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. f. [historia and grapho; historiographes,

Fr.] The art or employment of an historian.

HISTORY. n. f. [historia; historia, Latin; histoire, French.]

the manner of a buffoon.

To HIT. v. a. [from idus, Latin, Minshew, from hitte, Danish, to throw at random, Junius.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.

When I first saw her I was presently stricken; and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived. Sidney, b. i.

His conscience shall hit him in the teeth, and tell him his sin and folly. South's Sermon.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.

Is he a god that ever flies the light?

Or naked he, disguised in all untruth?

If he be blind, how hitteth he so right? Sidney, b. ii.

So hard it is to tremble, and not to err, and to hit the mark with a shaking hand. South's Sermon.

3. To attain; to reach the point.

Were I but twenty-one,

Your father's image is so hit in you,

His very air, that I should call you brother,

As I did him. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Search every comment that your care can find,

Some here, some there, may hit the poet's mind. Roscomm.

Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to hit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns. Lake.

Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in hitting features. Atterbury.

4. To strike a ruling passion.

Hail, divinest melancholy!

Whose faintly visage is too bright

To hit the sense of human light. Milton.

There you hit him: St. Dominick loves charity exceedingly; that argument never fails with him. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. To HIT off. To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.

What prince soever can hit off this great secret, need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs. Temple.

6. To HIT out. To perform by good luck.

Having the found of these ancient poets still ringing in his ears, he mought needs in finging hit out some of their tunes.

Spenser's Pastoral.

To HIT. v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.

If bodies be extension alone, how can they move and hit one against another; or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension? Locke.

The bones, teeth, and shells being sustained in the water with these metallic corpuscles, and the said corpuscles meeting with and hitting upon those bodies, become conjoined with them. Woodward's Natural History.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident; not to miss.

Of expectation fails, and most oft there

Where most it promises; and oft it hits

Where hope is coldest, and despair most fits. Shakespeare.

There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages amongst compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Bacon's Essay 53.

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.

The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it hits for the most part.

Bacon's Natural History.

But

HIT

But thou bring't valour too and wit, Hudibras, p. i.

Two things that seldom fail to hit.

This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible; for friars have free admittance into every house. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

All human race would fain be wits,

And millions miss for one that hits. Swift.

4. To light on.

You've hit upon the very strings, which touch'd,

Echoes the found, and jars within my soul;

There lies my grief. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing before that time: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon

it. Tillotson's Sermons.

There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon't, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg. L'Estr.

None of them hit upon the art. Addison's Guardian.

There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley.

HIT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke.

The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits. Shakef. Hamlet.

So he the famous Cilician fencer prais'd,

And at each hit with wonder seem'd amaz'd. Dryd. Juven.

2. A lucky chance.

Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit? Shak.

To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Glanville.

If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgment, but a lucky hit. South's Sermons.

But with more lucky hit than those

That use to make the stars depose.

The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Estr.

These hits of words a true poet often finds, without seeking. Dryden's Dunciad.

If casual concurrence did the world compose,

And things and hits fortuitous arose,

Then any thing might come from any thing;

For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackmore.

If at first he minds his hits,

And drinks champagne among the wits,

Five deep he toasts the tow'ring lassies. Prior.

To HIT. v. n. [hican, Saxon, or hican, French. Skinner.]

To catch; to move by jerks. I know not where it is used but in the following passage.

Whoe'er offends, at some unlucky time

Slides in a verse, or hitches in a rhyme;

Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,

And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope's Horace.

is hard. Hooker, b. iii. f. 7.
This holdeth not in the sea-coasts, because the vapour of the sea, without showers, doth refresh. Bacon's Natural History.
The lasting of plants is most in those that are largest of body; as oak, elm, and chestnut, and this holdeth in trees;
but in herbs it is often contrary. Bacon's Natural History.
When the religion formerly received is rent by discords, and when the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed, and full of scandal, and withal the times be stupid, ignorant, and barbarous, you may doubt the springing up of a new sect;
if then also there should arise any extravagant and strange spirit, to make himself author thereof; all which points held when Mahomet published his law. Bacon, Essay 59.
Nothing can be of greater use and defence to the mind than the discovering of these colours, shewing in what cases they hold, and in what they deceive. Bacon.

Will hollow rebel, tyrant, murderer. Dryden's Aurengzebe.
I pass for a disaffected person and a murderer, for no other reason but because I do not hoot and hollow, and make a noise. Addison's Spectator.
He with his hounds comes hollowing from the stable,
Makes love with nods, and kneels beneath a table. Pope.- HOLOWLY. adv. [from hollow.]
1. With cavities.
2. Unfaithfully; insincerely; dishonestly.
O earth, bear witness,
And crown what I profess with kind events,
If I speak true; if hollowly, invert
What best is boaded me, to mischief! Shakespeare's Tempest.
You shall arraign your conscience,
And try your penitence, if it be found,
Or hollowly put on. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.- HOLOWNESS. n. f. [from hollow.]
1. Cavity; state of being hollow.
If you throw a stone or a dart, they give no sound; no more do bullets, except they happen to be a little hollowed in the casting, which hollowness penneth the air. Bacon's Natur. Hist.
I have seen earth taken up by a strong wind, so that there remained great empty hollowness in the place. Hakewill.
An heap of sand or fine powder will suffer no hollowness within them, though they be dry substances. Burnet.- 2. Deceit; insincerity; treachery.
Thy youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty hearted, whose low found Reverbs no hollowness. Shakespeare's King Lear.
People, young and raw, and soft natured, think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of any man's: but when experience shall have shewn them the hardness of most hearts, the hollowness of others, and the baseness and ingratitude of almost all, they will then find that a friend is the gift of God, and that he only who made hearts can unite them. South's Sermons.- HOLOWROOT. n. f. [hollow and root.] A plant. Ainsworth.- HO'LLY. n. f. [polcyn, Saxon.] A plant.
The leaves are set about the edges with long, sharp, stiff prickles: the berries are small, round, and generally of a red colour, containing four triangular striated seeds in each. Of this tree there are several species; some variegated in the leaves, some with yellow berries, and some with white. Mill.
Fairest blossoms drop with every blast;
But the brown beauty will like hollies last. Gay.
Some to the holly hedge
Nothing repair, and to the thicket come;
Some to the rude protection of the thorn. Thompson's Spring.- HO'LLYHOCK. n. f. [holihoc, Saxon, commonly called holypack.]
Roscemallow.
It is in every respect larger than the common mallow: its leaves are rougher, and its flowers, which are in some species double, adhere closely to the stalk. They flower in July. Mill.
Hollyhocks far exceed poppies for their durability, and are very ornamental. Mortimer's Husbandry.- HO'LLYROSE. n. f. Plants. Ainsworth.- HO'LLYTREE. n. f. Plants. Ainsworth.- HOLME. n. f.
1. Holme or bowme, whether jointly or singly, comes from the Saxon holme, a river island; or if the place be not such, the same word signifies also a hill, or mountain. Gilson's Camden.- 2. The ilex; the evergreen oak.
Under what tree did'st thou take them companying together? who answered, under a holm tree. Sus. lvi.
The carver holme, the maple seldom inward found. Spenser.- HO'LOCAUST. n. f. [ἑλῶς and καύω.] A burnt sacrifice; a sacrifice of which the whole was consumed by fire, and nothing retained by the offerer.
Isaac carried the wood for the sacrifice, which being an holocaust, or burnt offering, to be consumed unto ashes, we cannot well conceive a burthen for a boy. Brown's Vulg. Err.
Let the eye behold no evil thing, and it is made a sacrifice; let the tongue speak no filthy word, and it becomes an oblation; let the hand do no unlawful action, and you render it a holocaust. Ray on the Creation.
Eumenes cut a piece from every part of the victim, and by this he made it an holocaust, or an entire sacrifice. Broome.- HO'LOGRAPH. n. f. [ῥῶγ and γραφω.] This word is used in the Scottish law to denote a deed written altogether by the grantor's own hand.- HOLP. And do him homage as obedient subjects. Shakespeare's Hen. VI.
The chiefs, in a solemn manner, did their homages, and made their oaths of fidelity to the earl marshal. Davis.- 2. Obedience; respect paid by external action.
The gods great mother, when her heav'nly race
Do homage to her. Denham.
A tuft of daisies on a flow'ry lay
They saw, and thitherward they bent their way;
To this both knights and dames their homage made,
And due obedience to the daisy paid. Dryden.
Go, go, with homage you proud victors meet!
Go, lie like dogs beneath your masters' feet. Dryden.- To HOMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To reverence by external action; to pay honour to; to profess fealty.- HOMAGER. n. f. [homager, Fr. from homage.] One who holds by homage of some superior lord.
As I'm Egypt's queen,
Thou blushest, Antony; and that blood of thine
Is Caesar's homager. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.
His subjects, traitors, are received by the duke of Bretagne his homager. Bacon's Henry VII.- HOME. n. f. [ham, Saxon.]
1. His own house; the private dwelling.
I'm now from home, and out of that provision
Which shall be needful for your entertainment. Shakespeare.
Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife. Dryden.
When Hector went to see
His virtuous wife, the fair Andromache,
He found her not at home; for he was gone. Dryden.
Those who have homes, when home they do repair,
To a last lodging call their wand'ring friends. Dryden.- 2. His own country.
How can tyrants safely govern home,
Unless abroad they purchase great alliance? Shakespeare's H. VI.
Their determination is to return to their homes, and to trouble you no more. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

My unprovided body. Shakespeare's King Lear.
A loyal fir
To him thou follow'it: I will pay thy graces
Home both in word and deed. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Her cause and yours
I'll perfect him withal; and he shall bring you
Before the duke, and to the head of Angelo Accuse him home and home. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.
Men of age object too much, adventure too little, and seldom drive business home to the full period; but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Bacon.
That cometh up home to the business, and taketh off the objection clearly. Sanderfon.
Break through the thick array
Of his throng'd legions, and charge home upon him. Addif.
He makes choice of some piece of morality; and in order to press this home, he makes less use of the force of reasoning.
Pope's View of Epick Poems.
I can only refer the reader to the authors themselves, who speak very home to the point. Atterbury's Sermon, Preface.
5. United to a substantive, it implies force and efficacy.
Poison may be false;
The home thrust of a friendly sword is sure. Dryden.
I am sorry to give him such home thrusts; for he lays himself so open, and uses so little art to avoid them, that I must either do nothing, or expose his weakness. Stillingfleet.
HOMERO'N. adv. [from home and born.]
1. Native; natural.
Though to be thus elemented, arm
These creatures from homeborn intricick harm. Donne.

And homebred evil, ye desire to hear,
I can you tidings tell. Fairy Queen, cant. i.
This once happy land,
By homebred fury rent, long groan'd. Phillips.
HOMEFELT. adv. [from home and felt.] Inward; private.
Yet they in pleasing number lull'd the sense,
And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself;
But such a sacred and homefelt delight,
Such sober certainty of waking bliss,
I never heard 'till now. Milton.
Happy next him who to these shades retires,
Whom nature charms, and whom the muse inspires,
Whom humbler joys of homefelt quiet please,
Successive study, exercise, and ease. Pope.
HOMELLY. adv. [from homely.] Rudely; inelegantly.
HOMELINESS. n. f. [from homely.] Plainness; rudeness; coarseness.

HOM

- Homer has opened a great field of railery to men of more delicacy than greatness of genius, by the homeliness of some of his sentiments. Addison's Spectator.
HOMELY. adj. [from home.] Plain; homely; not elegant;
not beautiful; not fine; coarse; rude.
Each place handsome without curiosity, and homely without loathsomeness. Sidney.
Within this wood, out of a rock did rise
A spring of water, mildly tumbling down;
Whereto approached not in any wife
The homely shepherd, nor the ruder clown. Spenser.
Like rich hangings in an homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift:
Riddling confession finds but riddling shrift. Shakespeare.
Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits. Shakespeare.
Our stomachs will make what's homely favoury. Shakespeare.
It is for homely features to keep home;
They had their name thence. Milton.
It is observed by some, that there is none so homely but loves a looking-glass. South's Sermon.
Their homely fare dispatch'd, the hungry band
Invade their trenchers next. Dryden's En. b. vii.
Now Stephen daily entertains
His Chloe in the homely strains. Swift.
Homely persons, the more they endeavour to adorn themselves, the more they expose the defects they want to hide. Clar.

He appeared in a suit of English broad-cloth, very plain, but rich: every thing he wore was substantial, honest, home-
spin ware. Addison.
3. Plain; coarse; rude; homely; inelegant.
They sometimes put on, when they go ashore, long slee-vels coats of homespun cotton. Sandys's Travels.
We say, in our homespun English proverb, He killed two birds with one stone; pleased the emperor, by giving him the resemblance of his ancestors, and gave him such a resemblance as was not scandalous in that age. Dryden's En. Dedicat.
Our homespun authors must forsake the field,
And Shakespeare to the soft Scarlatti yield. Addison.
HOMESPU'N. n. f. A coarse, inelegant, rude, untought, rustick man.
What hempen homespuns have we swaggering here,
So near the cradle of the fairy queen? Shakespeare.
HOMESTALL. n. f. [from home and stall, Saxon.] The place of HOMESTEAD. n. f. the house.
Both house and homestead into seas are born,
And rocks are from their old foundations torn. Dryden.

HOMeward. n. f. home; towards the native place; towards the place of residence.
Then Urania homeward did arise,
Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes. Sidney.
My affairs
Do even drag me homeward. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.
Look homeward, angel now, and melt with ruth;
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth! Milton.
Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures born,
They sing, and Asia's lakes their notes return. Dryden's En.
What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And, wand'ring homeward, seek our safety hence. Dryden.
HOMICIDE. n. f. [from homicide, French; homicidium, Latin.]
1. Murder; manquelling.
The apostles command to abstain from blood: contrive this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden; but contrive it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood. Hooker, b. iv.
2. Destruction.

HON

2. Destruction. In the following lines it is not proper.
What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!
The homicide of names is less than lives. Dryden.
3. [from homicide, Fr. homicida, Lat.] A murderer; a man-slayer.
Your beauty, that did haunt me in my sleep,
To undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.
—If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,
These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakespeare.
Hector comes, the homicide, to wield
His conqu'ring arms, with corps to strew the field. Dryden.
HOMICIDAL. adj. [from homicide.] Murderous; bloody.
The troop forth issuing from the dark recess,
With homicidal rage, the king opprest. Pope's Odyssey.
HOMILETICAL. adj. [from homiletikos.] Social; conversible.
His life was holy, and, when he had leisure for retirements, severe: his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not those lazy fullen ones of the cloyster. Atterbury.
HOMILY. n. f. [from homilies, French; homilies, Latin.] A discourse read to a congregation.
Homilies were a third kind of readings usual in former times;
a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the causal, as now the necessary defect of sermons. Hooker.
What tedious homily of love have you wearied your pa-tritioners withal, and never cried have patience, good people.
Shakespeare's As you like it.
If we survey the homilies of the ancient church, we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the business of the day. Hammond's Fundamentals.
HOMOGENEAL. adj. [from homogene, Fr. homogènes.] Having HOMOGENEOUS. n. f. the same nature or principles; suitable to each other.
The means of reduction, by the fire, is but by congregation of homogeneous parts. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
Ice is a similiary body, and homogeneous concretion, whose material is properly water. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
An homogeneous mass of one kind is easily distinguishable from any other; gold from iron, sulphur from alum, and so of the rest. Woodward's Natural History.
The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar. Newton's Opt.
HOMOGENEALNESS. n. f. [from homogeneous, or homogeneous.]
HOMOGENEITY. n. f. Participation of the same principles or HOMOGENEOUSNESS. n. f. nature; similitude of kind.
The mixtures acquire a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
Upon this supposition of only different diameters, it is impossible to account for the homogeneity or similarity of the se-cerned liquors. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
HOMOGENY. n. f. [from homogenia.] Joint nature.
By the driving back of the principal spirits, which preserve the consistence of the body, their government is dissolved, and every part returneth to his nature or homogeny. Bacon.
HOMOLOGOUS. adj. [from homologos, Fr. homologues.] Having the same manner or proportions.
HOMONYMOUS. adj. [from homonymos, Fr. homonymes.] Denominating different things; equivocal; ambiguous.
As words signifying the same thing are called synonymous, so equivocal words, or those which signify several things, are called homonymous, or ambiguous; and when persons use such ambiguous words, with a design to deceive, it is called equivocation. Watts's Logick.
HOMONYMY. n. f. [from homonymie, French; homonymie.] Equivocation; ambiguity.
HOMOTONOUS. adj. [from homotónos.] Equable: said of such distempers as keep a constant tenour of rise, state, and declension. Quincy.
HONE. n. f. [This word M. Casaubon derives from axon; Juni- nus from hogsaen, Welsh; Skinner, who is always rational, from pen, Saxon, a stone; penan, to stone.] A whetstone for a razor.
A hone and a parer, to pare away grafs. Tusser's Husband.
To HONE. v. n. [from hongan, Saxon.] To pine; to long for any thing.
HONEST. adj. [from honeste, French; honestus, Latin.]
1. Upright; true; sincere.
What art thou?
—A very honest hearted fellow, and as poor as the king. Sh.
The way to relieve ourselves from those sophisms, is an honest and diligent enquiry into the real nature and causes of things. Watts's Logick.
2. Chaste.
Wives may be merry, and yet honest too. Shakespeare.
3. Just; righteous; giving to every man his due.
4. It is sometimes used criminally for dishonest; base.
I'll devise some honest flanders
To stain my cousin with: one doth not know How much an ill word doth impose on liking. Shakespeare.
HONESTLY. adv. [from honest.]
1. Uprightly; justly.
It doth make me tremble,

HON

- There should those spirits yet breathe, that when they cannot Live honestly, would rather perish basely. Ben. Jonson's Catil.
For some time past all endeavours or proposals from private persons to advance the publick service, however honestly and innocently designed, have been called flying in the king's face. Swift.
2. With chastity; modestly.
HONESTY. n. f. [from honesteté, French; honestas, Latin.] Justice; truth; virtue; purity.
Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.
—Why, then mine honesty shall be my dower. Shakespeare.
Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a compulsion of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem. Temple.
HONIED. adj. [from hony.]
1. Covered with honey.
The bee with honed thigh,
That at her flow'ry work doth sing. Milton.
2. Sweet; luscious.
When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honed sentences. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue Draws hitherward. Milton's Agonistes.
HONEY. n. f. [from huni, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honey, honag, German.]
1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming viscous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. We have three kinds of honey:
the first and finest is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining from the combs without pressing. The second is thicker than the first, often almost solid, procured from the combs by pressure: and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs over the fire, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee, by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, swallows it, flies away with it to the hive, and discharges again from the stomach through the mouth into some of the cells of the comb. The honey thus taken up into the body of the bee, and deposited again into the cells of the comb, is destined for the food of the young offspring; but in hard seasons the bees are sometimes reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves, and die of hunger after they have eat it all up. Honey, taken out of the new combs early in the Summer, is vastly preferable to that taken from the same hive in Autumn. Honey is an excellent pectoral, is detergent, aperient, and diuretic. Phil's Mat. Med.
So work the honey bees,
Creatures that by a ruling nature teach
The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakespeare's Hen. V.
The like contention is found among the Greeks, touching his education and first fostering: some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees. Raleigh's History of the World.
In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours. Bacon's Natural History.
When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot. L'Estrange.
Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sopo, resolvent of the bile, balsamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Arbuthn.
New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;
Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope's Odyssey.
2. Sweetness; lusciousness.
The king hath found
Matter against him, that for ever mars
The honey of his language. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.
3. A name of tenderness; sweet; sweetness. [Mel; coreu, u. n.]
Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,
I prattle out of fashion, and I dote
In mine own comfort. Shakespeare's Othello.
Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee: didst not thou say, thou long'dst for a Christian slave? Dryden.
To HONEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.
Nay, but to live
In the rank sweat of an incestuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the nasty fly. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
HONEY-BAG.

HON

HO'NEY-BAG. n. f. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter. Grew's Museum.

HO'NEY-COMB. n. f. [honey and comb.] The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb surround,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd. Dryden.

HO'NEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.] Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mariner having discharged his gun, which was honey-combed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wijeman.

HO'NEY-DEW. n. f. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects. Mortimer's Husbandry.

How honey-dews embalm the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn. Garth.

HO'NEY-FLOWER. n. f. [melanthus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub: the leaves are like those of burnet; the cup of the flower is divided into several parts: the flower consists of four leaves, and is of an anomalous figure, sometimes in the shape of a fan, and at other times conical: the ovary becomes a fruit, resembling a bladder four cornered, divided into four cells, and pregnant with roundish seeds. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name. Miller.

HO'NEY-GNAT. n. f. [melio, Latin; honey and gnat.] An insect. Ainsworth.

HO'NEY-MOON. n. f. [honey and moon.] The first month after marriage, when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

A man should keep his finery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to dress till the honey-moon is over. Addis.

HO'NEY-SUCKLE. n. f. [caprifolium, Latin.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it. Shakespeare.

Watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

Then melfoil beat, and honey-suckle pound;
With these alluring favours strew the ground. Dryd. Virgil.

HO'NEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them honeyless. Shaksp. Julius Caesar.

HO'NEY-WORT. n. f. [cerinthe, Latin.] A plant.

It hath glaucous deep green leaves, which are, for the most part, beset with prickles: the flowers are cylindrical, consisting of one leaf, in shape like those of comfrey, and are pendulous: each flower turns to the top of the second page of the third leaf following. Miller.

HO'NORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour.

There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addis on Italy.

This monument is only honorary; for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addis on Italy.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abounded with these little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addis Guard.

HO'NOUR. n. f. [honor, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon's Essays.

3. The title of a man of rank.

Return unto thy lord,
Bid him not fear the separated councils:
His honour and myself are at the one;
And at the other is my good friend Cateby. Shaksp. R. III.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them honours,
Of man's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee. Shaksp.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness; magnanimity.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
—That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,
His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shak.

If by honour is meant any thing distinct from conscience, 'tis no more than a regard to the censure and esteem of the world. Rogers's Sermons.

6. Reverence; due veneration.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

There, my lord,
The high promotion of his grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his state at door, 'mongst purfuivants.
—Ha! 'tis he, indeed!

Is this the honour they do one another? Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent, under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it, implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power. Rogers's Sermons.

7. Chastity.

Be she honour flav'd,
I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven;
If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shak. Winter's Tale.

She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not prevent itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

8. Dignity of mien.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect! with native honour clad,
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all. Milton's Parad. Lost.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

10. Public mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves. Dryden's A. b. vi.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living. Atterbury's Sermons.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that, at best, can be celebrated but by an inconsiderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given. Wake's Preparation for Death.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the seventh, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd to me my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

12. Civilities paid.

Then here a slave, or if you will a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope's Horat.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The fire then took the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed. Dryden.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise. Shaksp.

HO'NOUR. v. a. [honor, French; honore, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was called our father, and was continually honoured of all men, as the next person unto the king. Esch. xvi. 11.

The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich man is honoured for his riches. Ecclus. x. 30.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches! Ecclus. x. 31.

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not. Pope.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us, the honour'd number. Shaksp.

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them, and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord. Ex. xiv.

HO'NOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.

Sir, I'll tell you,
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth? Jf. xxiii. 8.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

Think it thou it honourable for a nobleman Still to remember wrongs. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

3. Conferring honour.

Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,
And honourable wounds from battle brought. Dryden's A.

1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.
There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again. Jad. xiv. 7.
Hope is that pleasure in the mind which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing, which is apt to delight him.
When in heav'n the shall his essence see,
This is her sov'reign good, and perfect bliss;
Her longings, withings, hopes, all finitely'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this.
Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee
We are not where or what we be;
But what and where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now. Crofton. Faith.

HOP

Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hope to despair. Taylor.

most lasting happiness, in case of obedience. Tillotson.
The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for sight, desire for enjoyment. Atterbury.
Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hopes of them. Swift.
2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any body.
It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him. 2 Mac. vii. 14.
Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord. Ecclesi. xiv. 2.
I had hope of France,
Ev'n as I have of fertile England's soil. Shakep. Henry VI.
3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.
I might see from far some forty truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope of the Strand, where she was quarter'd. Shakep. Henry VIII.
4. The object of hope.
Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;
To wit, an indigested deform'd lump. Shakep. Henry VI.
She was his care, his hope, and his delight,
Most in his thoughts, and ever in his sight. Dryden.
HOPPER. n. f. Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains.
Ansforth.
TO HOPE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To live in expectation of some good.
Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husbandman hope for a good harvest. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
My muse, by forms long tost,
Is thrown upon your hospitable coast;
And finds more favour by her ill success,
Than she could hope for by her happiness. Dryden.
Who knows what adverse fortune may befall!
Arm well your mind, hope little, and fear all. Dryden.
2. To place confidence in futurity.
He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord. Pf. xxxi. 24.
TO HOPE. v. a. To expect with desire.
The fun shines hot; and if we use delay,
Cold-biting Winter mars our hop'd for hay. Shak. Hen. VI.
So stands the Thracian herdsmen with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden's Fables.
HOPEFUL. adj. [from hope and full.]
1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.
He will advance thee:
I know his noble nature, not to let Thy hopeful service perish. Shakep. Henry VIII.
You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince whom you must not desert. Bacon.
What to the old can greater pleasure be,
Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see? Denham.
They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threefold. Addison.
2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.
Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatsoever they took in hand. Hooker, b. v.
I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments. Boyle.
Whatever ills the friendless orphan bears,
Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,
Still must the wrong'd Telemachus sustain,
If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain. Pope's Odyssey.
HOPEFULLY. adv. [from hopeful.]
1. In such a manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.
He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with carls sons and heirs. Watt.
They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hopefully, to the reduction or suppression of the Irish. Clarendon.
2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.
From your promising and generous endeavours we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature. Glanville's Preface.

HOR

HOPEFULNESS. n. f. [from hopeful.] Promise of good; likelihood to succeed.
Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, of characters, whereby may be timely described what the child will prove in probability. Watson.
HOPELESS. adj. [from hope.]
1. Without hope; without pleasing expectation.
Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead? Hooker, b. iv.
Alas, I am a woman, friendless, hopeless! Shakep. He watches with greedy hope to find
His wish, and best advantage, us afunder;
Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, where each
To other speedy aid might lend at need. Mil. Parad. Lost.
The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,
And hopeless to prevail by open force,
Seeks hid advantage. Dryden's State of Innocence.
Hopeless of ransom, and condemn'd to lie
In durance, doom'd a ling'ring death to die. Dryden's Fub.
2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing.
The hopeless word of never to return,
Breathe I against thee upon pain of life. Shakep. R. II.
HOPE. n. f. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.
I except all hoppers, who turn the scale, because the strong expectation of a good certain salary, will outweigh the loss by bad rents. Swift on the Sacramental Test.
HOPEFULLY. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.
One sign of despair is the peremptory contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopefully, and confidently in wilful habits of sin. Hammond.
HOPPER. n. f. [from hop.] He who hops or jumps on one leg. Ansforth.
HOPPERS. [commonly called Savch hoppers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.
HOPPER. n. f. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, for the same reason, tremus or tremus.]
1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.
The salt of the lake Asphaltites shooteth into perfect cubes: sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hopper of a mill. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.
Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill: their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach. Arbutnot on Aliments.
Just at the hopper will I stand,
In my whole life I never saw grift ground,
And mark the clack how justly it will found. Batterton.
2. A basket for carrying feed. Ansforth.
HORAL. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour.
How'er reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the hora orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.
HORARY. adj. [from horaire, French; horarius, Latin.]
1. Relating to an hour.
I'll draw a figure that shall tell you
What you perhaps forgot befell you,
By way of horary inspection,
Which some account our worst erection. Hindbrat, p. ii.
In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has largely discussed, under the character of Reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers. Tatler, No. 56.
2. Continuing for an hour.
When, from a basket of Summer-fruit, God by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquility was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of Summer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HORDE. n. f. A clan; a migratory crew of people.
Of lost mankind, in polist'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form. Thoms. Winter.
HORIZON. n. f. [from horizon.] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakespeare horizon.
When the morning sun shall raise his car
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates. Shakep.
She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon's Henry VII.
Far in th' horizon to the North appear'd,
From skint to skint, a fiery region. Milton's Paradise Lost.
In his East the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day; and all th' horizon round
Invested with bright rays. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

The

HOR

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning gray;
And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,
That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous light. Dryden.
When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect. Addison's Spectator.

HORIZONTAL. adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon.]

1. Near the horizon.
As when the sun, new risen,
Looks through the horizontal misty air,
Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,
In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds
On half the nations. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.
An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Augustus. Brown.
The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbutnot on Coins.

HORIZONTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.] In a direction parallel to the horizon.

As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally unto it. Brown's Vulg. Err.
The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with celerity. Bentley's Sermons.

HORN. n. f. [horn, Gothick; horn, Saxon; horn, Dutch.]
1. The hard pointed bodies which grow on the heads of some gaminivorous quadrupeds, and serve them for weapons.

No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth. Bacon's N. Hist.
Zelus rises through the ground,
Bending the bull's tough neck with pain,
That toiles back his horns in vain. Addison on Italy.
All that process is no more surprising than the eruption of horns in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age. Bentley's Sermons.

2. An instrument of wind-musick made of horn.
The squire gan n'gher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle-wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Fairy Queen.
There's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

The goddess to her crooked horn
Adds all her breath: the rocks and woods around,
And mountains, tremble at th' infernal sound. Dryden.

Fair Alcianus, and his youthful train,
With horns and hounds a hunting match ordain. Dryden.

3. The extremity of the waxing or waning moon, as mentioned by poets.
She blest'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dryden.

The moon
Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns. Thomson.
The feelers of a snail. Whence the proverb, To pull in the horns, to repress one's ardour.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,
Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakespeare.

Audius,
Hearing of our Marcius's banishment,
Thrust forth his horns again into the world,
Which were in hell'd when Marcius stood for Rome,
And durst not once peep out. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

5. A drinking cup made of horn.

6. Antler of a cuckold.
If I have horns to make one mad,
Let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad. Shakespeare.
Merchants, vent'ring through the main,
Slight pyrates, rocks, and horns for gain. Hudibras, p. ii.

7. HORN mad. Perhaps mad as a cuckold.
I am glad he went not in himself: if he had, he would have been horn mad. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

HORNB'AK. n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HORNFISH. n. f. A kind of fish.

HORNB'AM. n. f. [horn and beam, Dutch, for tree, from the hardness of the timber.]

It hath leaves like the elm or beech-tree: the katkins are placed at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree, and the outward shell of the fruit is winged. This tree was formerly much used in hedges for wildernesses and oranges.

The timber is very tough and inflexible, and of excellent use. Milner.

HORNB'OOK. n. f. [horn and book.] The first book of children, covered with horn to keep it unsoiled.
He teaches boys the hornbook. Shak. Love's Labour's Lost.
Nothing has been considered of this kind out of the ordinary road of the hornbook and primer. Locke.

To master John the English maid
A hornbook gives of ginger-bread;
And that the child may learn the better,
As he can name, he eats the letter. Prior.

HOR

HORNED. adj. [from horn.] Furnished with horns.
As when two rams, stir'd with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that, with the terror of the shock, Astonish'd both stand senseless as a block. Fairy Queen, b. i.

O, that I were
Upon the hill of Bafan, to out-roar
The horned herd. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

Thither all the horned host resorts,
To graze the ranker mead. Denham.
Thou king of horned floods, whose plenteous urn
Suffices fatnels to the fruitful corn. Dryden.

HORN'ER. n. f. [from horn.] One that works in horn, and sells horns.

The skin of a bull's forehead is the part of the hide made use of by horners, whereupon they shave their horns. Greus.

HORN'ET. n. f. [hornet, Saxon, from its horns.] A very large strong stinging fly, which makes its nest in hollow trees.
Silence, in times of fuff'ring, is the best;
'Tis dangerous to disturb a hornet's nest. Dryden.

Hornets do mischief to trees by breeding in them. Martin.
I have often admired how hornets, that gather dry materials for building their nests, have found a proper matter to glue their combs. Derham's Physico-Theology.

HORN'FOOT. n. f. [horn and foot.] Hoofed.

Mad frantick man,
That did not only quake!
With horn-foot horses, and brass wheels,
Jove's storms to emulate. Hakewill on Providence.

HORN'OWL. n. f. A kind of horned owl.

HORN'PIPE. n. f. [horn and pipe.] A county dance, danced commonly to a horn.

A lusty tablere,
That to thee many a hornpipe play'd,
Whereto they dauncen each one with his maid. Spenser.

There many a hornpipe he tun'd to his Phyllis. Raleigh.
Let all the quicksilver 't the mine
Run 't the feet-veins, and refine
Your firkhum jerkum to a dance
Shall fetch the fiddlers out of France,
To wonder at the hornpipe here
Of Nottingham and Derbyshire. Ben. Johnson.

Florida danced the Derbyshire hornpipe in the presence of several friends. Tatler, No. 106.

HORNSTONE. n. f. A kind of blue stone.

HORNWORK. n. f. A kind of angular fortification.

HORN'Y. adj. [from horn.]

1. Made of horn.

2. Resembling horn.
He thought he by the brook of Cherith stood,
And saw the ravens with their horny beaks
Food to Elijah bringing even and morn. Milton's Pa. Lgh.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up above its convexity, and is of an hyperbolical figure.

Rough are her ears, and broad her horny feet. Dryd. Virg.
The pineal gland was encompassed with a kind of horny substance. Addison's Spectator.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates it so as to turn it horny, like parchment; but when it is thoroughly putrid, it will no longer concrete. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Hard as horn; callous.
Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,
Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden's Æn.

HOROGRAPHY. n. f. [horographie, Fr. hora and γραφω.] An account of the hours.

HOROLOG. n. f. [horologium, Latin.] Any instrument that tells the hour: as a clock; a watch; an hourglass.

'Tis evermore the prologue to his sleep;
He'll watch the horologe a double fet,
If drink rock not his cradle. Shakespeare's Othello.

Before the days of Jerome there were horologies, that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsamnia. Brown.

HOROMETRY. n. f. [horometrie, French; hora and μετρο.] The art of measuring hours.

It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HOROSCOPE. n. f. [horoscope, French; hora and σκοπε.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and countervail that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth? Drummond.

A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh house, or opposite signs every seventh year, oppresseth living natures. Bis.

His fire, the bear-ey'd Vulcan of a shop,
From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school. Dryd. Juven.

HOR

The Greek names this the horoscope;
This governs life, and this marks out our parts;
Our humours, manners, qualities and arts. Creech's Manil.

They understood the planets and the zodiack by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust they sprung out of. Bentley's Sermons.

HORRIBLE. adj. [horrible, French; horribilis, Lat.] Dreadful; terrible; shocking; hideous; enormous.

No colour affecteth the eye much with displeasure: there be fights that are horrible, because they excite the memory of things that are odious or fearful. Bacon's Natural History.

Eternal happiness and eternal misery, meeting with a persuation that the soul is immortal, are, of all others, the first the most desirable, and the latter the most horrible to human apprehension. South's Sermons.

HORRIBLENESS. n. f. [from horrible.] Dreadfulness; hideousness; terribleness; fearfulness.

HORRIBLY. adv. [from horrible.]

1. Dreadfully; hideously.
What hideous noise was that!
Horribly loud. Milton's Agonistes.

2. To a dreadful degree.
The contagion of these ill precedents, both in civility and virtue, horribly infects children. Locke.

HORRID. adj. [horridus, Latin.]

1. Hideous; dreadful; shocking.
Oh!
Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
That we the horrid may seem to those Which chance to find us. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd,
In evils to top Macbeth. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Shocking; offensive; unpleasing; in womens cant.
Already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say. Pope.

3. Rough; rugged.
Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn,
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dry.

HORRIDNESS. n. f. [from horrid.] Hideousness; enormity.
A bloody designer suborns his instrument to take away such a man's life, and the confessor represents the horridness of the fact, and brings him to repentance. Hammond.

HORRIFICK. adj. [horrificus, Latin.] Causing horror.
His jaws horrifick, arm'd with three-fold fate,
Here dwells the direful shark. Thomson's Summer.

HORRIFONOUS. adj. [horrifonus, Latin.] Sounding dreadfully. Diſt.

HORROR. n. f. [horror, Latin; horreur, French.]

1. Terror mixed with detestation; a passion compounded of fear and hate, both strong.
Over them sad horror, with grim hue,
Did always soar, beating his iron wings;
And after him owls and night ravens flew,
The hateful messengers of heavy things. Fairy Queen, b. ii.

I have sapt full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Doublets all souls have a surviving thought,
Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;
But if we think of being turn'd to nought,
A trembling horror in our souls we find. Davies.

Me damp horror chill'd
At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed so bold.
Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;
Their pride is humbled, and their fear confess. Dryden.

2. Gloom; dreaminess.
Her gloomy preference saddens all the scene,
Shades ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green;
Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

3. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of shuddering or shinking. Quincy.
All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and, upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Natural History.

HORSE. n. f. [hors, Saxon.]

1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught and carriage.
Duncan's horses, the minions of the race,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

A horse! a horse! my kingdom for a horse! Shak. R. III.
I would sell my horses, and buy ten more Better than he. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

Thy face, bright centaur, Autumn's heats retain,
The softer season suiting to the man;
Whilst Winter's shivering goat affects the horse
With frost, and makes him an uneasy course. Creech.

We call a little horse, such a one as comes not up to the size of that idea which we have in our minds to belong ordinarily to horses. Locke.

HOR

I took horse to the lake of Constance, which is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison on Italy.

2. It is used in the plural sense, but with a singular termination; for horses, horsemen, or cavalry.

I did hear
The galloping of horse: who was't came by? Shak. Macb.
The armies were appointed, consisting of twenty-five thousand horse and foot, for the repulsing of the enemy at their landing. Bacon's War with Spain.

If they had known that all the king's horse were quartered behind them, their foot might very well have marched away with their horse. Clarendon, b. viii.

Th' Arcadian horse
With ill success engage the Latin force. Dryden's Æn.

3. Something on which any thing is supported: as, a horse to dry linen on.

4. A wooden machine which soldiers ride by way of punishment. It is sometimes called a timber-mare.

5. Joined to another substantive, it signifies something large or coarse: as, a horseface, a face of which the features are large and indelicate.

To HORSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mount upon a horse.
He came out with all his clowns, horsed upon such cartjades, and so furnished, as in good faith I thought with myself, if that were thrift, I wist none of my friends or subjects ever to thrive. Sidney, b. ii.

After a great fight there came to the camp of Gonzalvo, the great captain, a gentleman proudly horsed and armed: Diego de Mendoza asked the great captain, Who's this? Who answered, It is St. Ermin, who never appears but after the storm.
Bacon's Apophthegms.

2. To carry one on the back.
3. To ride any thing.
Stalls, bulks, windows
Are smother'd, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him. Shakespeare.

4. To cover a mare.
If you let him out to horse more mares than your own, you must feed him well. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HORSEBACK. n. f. [horse and back.] The feat of the rider;
the state of being on a horse.

I've seen the French,
And they can well on horseback. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

I saw them salute on horseback,
Beheld them when they lighted. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

He fought but one remarkable battle wherein there were any elephants, and that was with Porus, king of India; in which notwithstanding he was on horseback. Brown's Vul. Err.

When mannish Mevia, that two-handed whore Affrude on horseback hunts the Tuscan boar. Dryd. Juvenal.

If your ramble was on horseback, I am glad of it, on account of your health. Swift to Gay.

HORSEBEAN. n. f. [horse and bean.] A small bean usually given to horses.

Only the small horsebean is propagated by the plough. Mort.

climb to a horse.

HORSEBOAT. n. f. [horse and boat.] A boat used in ferrying horses.

HORSEBOY. n. f. [horse and boy.] A boy employed in dressing horses; a stableboy.

Some horseboys, being awake, discovered them by the fire in their matches. Knolles's History of the Turks.

HORSEBREAKER. n. f. [horse and break.] One whose employment it is to tame horses to the saddle.

Under Sagittarius are born chariot-racers, horsebreakers, and tamers of wild beasts. Creech.

HORSECHESNUT. n. f. [horse and chesnut.] A plant.
It hath digitated or fingered leaves: the flowers, which consist of five leaves, are of an anomalous figure, opening with two lips: there are male and female upon the same spike:
the female flowers are succeeded by nuts, which grow in green prickly husks. Their whole year's shoot is commonly performed in three weeks time, after which it does no more than increase in bulk, and become more firm; and all the latter part of the Summer is occupied in forming and strengthening the buds for the next year's shoots. Miller.

I may bring in the horsechesnut, which grows into a goodly standard. Mortimer's Husbandry.

HORSECOURSER. n. f. [horse and courser.] Junius derives it from horse and course, an old Scotch word, which signifies to change; and it should therefore, he thinks, be writ horsecoursier.
The word now used in Scotland is horsecouper, to denote a jockey, feller, or rather changer of horses. It may well be derived from coursie, as he that sells horses may be supposed to coursie or exercise them.]

1. One that runs horses, or keeps horses for the race.

2. A dealer in horses.
A fervant to a horsecoursier was thrown off his horse. Wifem.
A Florentine bought a horse for so many crowns, upon condition

HOR

Condition to pay half down: the horsecourser comes to him next morning for the remainder. L'Estrange.
HORSECRAB. n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.
HORSECUCUMBER. n. f. [horse and cucumber.] A plant. The horsecucumber is the large green cucumber, and the best for the table, green out of the garden. Mortimer.
HORSEDUNG. n. f. [horse and dung.] The excrements of horses. Put it into an ox's horn, and, covered close, let it rot in hot horfed dung. Peacham on Drawing.
HORSEEMMET. n. f. [horse and emmet.] Ant of a large kind. Horseflesh. n. f. [horse and flesh.] The flesh of horses. The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have colts flesh baked. Bacon's Natural History.
 An old hungry lion would fain have been dealing with a good piece of horseflesh that he had in his eye; but the nag he thought would be too fleet for him. L'Estrange.

Or needy bankrupts. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
HOTCOCKLES. n. f. [hautes coquilles, French.] A play in which one covers his eyes, and guesses who strikes him.
The chytindra is certainly not our hotcockles; for that was by pinching, not by striking. Arbutnot. and Pope's Mar. Scribl.
As at hotcockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and read soft mischief in her eye. Gay's Post.
HOTHEADED. adj. [hot and head.] Vehement; violent; passionate.
One would not make the same person zealous for a standing army and publick liberty; nor a hotheaded, crackbrained cocomb forward for a scheme of moderation. Arbutnot.
HOTHOUSE. n. f. [hot and house.]
1. A bagnio; a place to sweat and cup in.
Now she professes a hotthouse, which, I think, is a very ill house too. Shak. Measure for Measure.

That hotmouth'd beast that bears against the curb,
Hard to be broken. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
HOTTENESS. n. f. [from hot.] Heat; violence; fury.
HOTCHPOTCH. n. f. [haché en poche, French; or hachée en pot, French, as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used.] A mingled hash;
a mixture.
Such patching maketh Littleton's hotchpot of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rather to a Babelish confusion than any one entire language. Camden's Remains.
A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture of hotchpotch of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste. Bacon's Natural History.
Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcasses would remain;
But a math'd heap, a hotchpotch of the slain. Dryd. Juvenal.
HOTSPUR. n. f. [hot and spur.]
1. A man violent, passionate, precipitate and heady.
My nephew's trespass may be well forgot;
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,
A harebrain'd hotspur, govern'd by a spleen. Shaksp. H. IV.
Wars are begun by hairbrained dissolute captains, parasitical fawners, unquiet hotspurs, and restless innovators. Burton.
2. A kind of pea of speedy growth.
Of such peas as are planted or sown in gardens, the hotspur is the speediest of any in growth. Mortimer's Husbandry.
HOTSPURRED. adj. [from hotspur.] Vehement; rash;
heady.
To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or Venus like that hotspurred Harpalice in Virgil, this proceedeth from a senseless judgment. Peacham.
HOVE. The preterite of heave.
HOVEL. n. f. [Diminutive of hope, house, Saxon.]
1. A shed open on the sides, and covered overhead.
So likewise a hovel will serve for a roomee,
To stacke on the pease, when harvest shall come. Tusser.
If you make a large hovel, thatched, over some quantity of ground, plank the ground over, and it will breed saltpetre.
Bacon's Natural History.
Your hay it is mow'd, your corn it is reap'd,
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd. Dryden.
2. A mean habitation; a cottage.
The men clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them, and milk them, and do all the dairy-work in such forry hovels and sheds as they build to inhabit in during the Summer. Roy on the Creation.
TO HOVEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To shelter in an hovel.
And wasn't thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Shakespeare's King Lear.

HOU

If cheefe be to hoven, make Cisse to seek creeks. Tusser.
TO HOVER. v. n. [hoveis, to hang over, Welsh].
1. To hang in the air over head, without flying off one way or other.
Some fiery devil hovens in the sky,
And pours down mischief. Shak. King John.
Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!
If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,
Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation. Shak. Richard III.
A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden's An.
Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and fetting upon it. Addison's Spectator.
Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;
Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,
Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,
And thence with liberty unbouded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies. Prior.
Some less refin'd, beneath the moon's pale light,
Hover, and catch the shooting stars by night. Pope.
2. To stand in suspense or expectation.
The landlord will no longer covenant with him; for that he daily looketh after change and alteration, and hovereth in expectation of new worlds. Spenser on Ireland.
3. To wander about one place.
We see so warlike a prince at the head of so great an army, hovering on the borders of our confederates.
The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind fully possesses itself of it; in the other, it only lovers about it. Lake.
HOUGH. n. f. [hog, Saxon].
1. The lower part of the thigh.
Blood shall be from the sword unto the belly, and dung of men unto the camel's hough. 2 Esd. xiii. 36.
2. [Hut, French.] An adz; an hoe. See Hoe.

northern counties still retain it.
HOULTR. n. f. [holt, Saxon.] A small wood. Obsolete.
Or as the wind, in hoults and shady groves,
A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves. Fairfax.
HOUND. n. f. [hund, Saxon; hund, Scottish.] A dog used in the chase.
Hounds and greyhounds, mungrels, spaniels, curs,
Are cleped all by the name of dogs. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Jason threw, but fail'd to wound
The boar, and slew an undeserving hound,
And through the dog the dart was nail'd to ground. Dryd.
The kind spaniel and the faithful hound,
Likest that fox in shape and species found,
Pursues the noted path and covets home. Prior.
TO HOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To set on the chase.
God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare. Bramhall.
2. To hunt; to pursue.
If the wolves had been hounded by tygers, they should have worried them. L'Estrange.
HO'UNDFISH. n. f. A kind of fish.
HOUSTON. n. f. [synaglossum, Latin.] A plant.
The cup of the flower consists of one leaf, deeply cut into five parts: the flower consists of one leaf, which arises from the bottom of the flower, changes into a fruit composed of four rough, each for the most part burry cells, and containing a flat seed affixed to a pyramidal and quadrilateral placenta. The proper season to take the roots up is soon after the leaves decay. Miller.

HOUP. n. f. [upupa, Latin.] The puet.
HOURE. n. f. [heure, French; hora, Latin.]
1. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of sixty minutes.
See the minutes how they run:
How many makes the hour full compleat,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live. Shaksp. H. VI.
2. A particular time. Vexation

HOU

Vexation almost stops my breath,
That funder'd friends greet in the hour of death. Shaksp.
When we can intreat an hour to serve,
We'll spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the time. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The conscious wretch must all his arts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden's An.
3. The time as marked by the clock.
The hour runs through the roughest day. Shakespeare.
Our neighbour let her floor to a genteel man, who kept good hours. Tatler, N^o. 88.
They are as loud any hour of the morning, as our own countrymen at midnight. Addison's Guardian.
HOURLASS. n. f. [hour and glass.]
1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.
Next morning, known to be a morning better by the hour- glass than by the day's clearness. Sidney.
If a man be in sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind doth value every moment. Bacon.
O, recollect your thoughts!
Shake not his hourglass, when his hasty hand
Is ebbing to the last. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.
We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field. Bacon.
HOURLY. adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour;
frequent; often repeated.
Alcyone
Computes how many nights he had been gone,
Observes the waining moon with hourly view,
Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryden.
We must live in hourly expectation of having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us. Swift.
HOURLY. adv. [from hour.] Every hour; frequently.
She deserves a lord,
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And hourly call her mistress. Shak. All's well that ends well.
Our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
They with ceaseless cry
Surround me, as thou faw'st; hourly conceiv'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. ii.
Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd,
'Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd. Dryden.
HOURLATE. n. f. [hour and plate.] The dial; the plate on which the hours pointed by the hand of a clock are inscribed.
If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that acuteness. Locke.
HOUSE. n. f. [pur, Saxon; huys, Dutch; huse, Scottish].
1. A place wherein a man lives; a place of human abode.
Sparrows must not build in his house eaves. Shakespeare.
Houses are built to live in, not to look on; therefore let us be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had. Bacon, Essay 46.
In a house the doors are moveable, and the rooms square;
yet the house is neither moveable nor square. Watts.
2. Any place of abode.
The bees with smoke, the doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driven away. Shakespeare.

upon madam. Swift.
5. Station of a planet in the heavens, astrologically considered.
Pure spiritual substances we cannot converse with, therefore have need of means of communication, which some make to be the celestial houses: those who are for the celestial houses worship the planets, as the habitations of intellectual substances that animate them. Stillingfleet.
6. Family of ancestors, descendants, and kindred; race.
The red rose and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our striving houses. Shaksp. Henry VI.
An ignominious ranfom and free pardon
Are of two houses; lawful mercy sure
Is nothing kin to foul redemption. Shak. Meas. for Measure.
By delaying my last fine, upon your grace's accession to the patrimonies of your house, I may seem to have made a forfeiture. Dryden's Fables, Dedication.
A poet is not born in every race;
Two of a house few ages can afford,
One to perform, another to record. Dryden's Fables.

dog. Addison's Spectator.
HOUSEHOLD. n. f. [house and hold.]
1. A family living together.
Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean. Shakespeare.
A little kingdom is a great household, and a great household a little kingdom. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Of God observ'd
The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wond'rous ark, as thou beheld'st,
To save himself and household from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. xi.
He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men, a peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and governed as a master: this is the proper household of faith; in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Spratt's Sermons.
Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,
And second funerals on the former laid;
Let the whole household in one ruin fall,
And may Diana's curse o'ertake us all. Dryden's Fables.
Learning's little household did embark,
With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark. Swift.
In his own church he keeps a seat,
Says grace before and after meat;
And calls, without affecting airs,
His household twice a day to prayers. Swift.
2. Family life; domestick management.
An inventory, thus importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household. Shaksp. H. VIII.

HOU

For nothing lovelier can be found
In woman, than to study household good;
And good works in her husband to promote. Milt. Pa. Lof.
It would be endless to enumerate the oaths and blasphemies among the men, among the women the neglect of household affairs. Swift.
HOUSEHOLDER. n. f. [from household.] Master of a family.
A certain householder planted a vineyard. Mat. xxi. 33.
HOUSEHOLDSTUFF. n. f. [household and stuff.] Furniture of an house; utensils convenient for a family.
In this war that he maketh, he still flieth from his foe, and lurketh in the thick woods, waiting for advantages: his cloke is his bed, yea and his householdstuff. Spenser on Ireland.
A great part of the building was consumed, with much costly householdstuff. Bacon's Henry VII.
The poor woman had her jest for her householdstuff, and paid her physician with a conceit for his money. L'Estrange.
HOUSEEKER. n. f. [house and keep.]
1. Householder; master of a family.
To be said an honest man and a good housekeeper, goes as from the greatest evils; and to enjoy, if it may be, all good, however the chiefest. Tillotson, Sermon 1.

3. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet.
In your excuse your love does little say;
You might howe'er have took a fairer way. Dryden.
His views are bounded on all sides by several ranges of mountains, which are however at so great a distance, that they leave a wonderful variety of beautiful prospects. Addison on Italy.
I do not build my reasoning wholly on the case of persecution, however I do not exclude it. Atterbury.
Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end; which would, however, be a very useful enquiry. Swift.
To Howl. v. n. [Dyblen, Dutch; ululo, Latin.]
1. To cry as a wolf or dog.
Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howl'd in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise
I trembling wak'd. Shakespeare's Richard III.
If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key. Shakespeare.
He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deutr. xxxii. 10.
As when a sort of wolves infest the night,
With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light. Waller.
Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,
Pierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;
He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns. Smith.
2. To utter cries in distress.
Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab. Jer. xlviii.
The damned use that word in hell,
Howlings attend it. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
Each new morn
New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows
Strike heaven on the face, that it rebounds
As if it felt with Scotland. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
The noise grows louder still:
Rattling of armour, trumpets, drums and ataballes;
And sometimes peals of shouts that rend the heav'ns;
Like victory: then groans again, and howlings
Like those of vanquish'd men. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
3. To speak with a belluine cry or tone.
Peace, monster, peace! Go tell thy horrid tale
To savages, and howl it out in deserts!

to call out to others.
They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a barker or buer, who stands on the cliff-side, and from thence directeth the course of the pilchard. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
HUFF. n. f. [from hove, or hoven, swelled: he is huffed up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to heave or ferment: buff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a buff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]
1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance.
Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word
To swear by only in a lord;
In others it is but a buff,
To vapour with instead of proof. Hudibras, p. ii.
His frowns kept multitudes in awe,
Before the bluster of whose buff.
All hats, as in a storm, flew off. Hudibras.
We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very buff of our greatness. L'Estrange.
A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the buff about his extraction. L'Estrange.
No man goes about to enslave or circumvent another in a passion, to lay train, and give secret blows in a present buff. South's Sermons.
2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.
Lewd shallow-brained buffs make atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit. South.
As for you, colonel buff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plotter. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
To HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To swell; to puff.
In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be huffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe. Grew's Colloq. Sac.
2. To hector; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.
To HUFF. v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.
This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them buff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them. South.
A huffing, shining, flat'ring, cringing coward,
A cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him. Orway.
A thief and justice, fool and knave,
A huffing officer and slave. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 3.
Huffing to cowards, fawning to the brave,
To knaves a fool, to credulous fools a knave. Reverend.

HUL

Now what's his end? O charming glory, say!
What, a fifth act to crown his huffing play? Dryd. Juvenal.
What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with. Locke.
When Peg received John's message, she huffed and stormed like the devil. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
HUFFER. n. f. [from buff.] A blusterer; a bully.
Nor have I hazarded my art
To be expos'd i' th' end to suffer,
By such a braggadocio huffer. Hudibras, p. ii. cant. 3.
HUFFISH. adj. [from buff.] Arrogant; insolent; hectoring.
HUFFISHLY. adv. [from huffish.] With arrogant petulance;
with bullying bluster.
HUFFISHNESS. n. f. Petulance; arrogance; noisy bluster.
To HUG. v. a. [Hegian, Saxon, to hedge, to inclose.]
1. To press close in an embrace.
He bewept my fortune,
And hugg'd me in his arms. Shakef. Richard III.
What would not he do now to hug the creature that had given him so admirable a serenade! L'Estrange.
Ev'n in that urn their brother they confess,
And hug it in their arms, and to their bosom press. Dryden.
King Xerxes was enamour'd upon an oak, which he would hug and kiss. Harvey on Conjunctions.
2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.
I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unplaurable,
Win me into the easy-hearted man,
And bug him into snarcs. Milton.
We bug deformities, if they bear our names. Glauco.
Admire yourself,
And, without rival, bug your darling book. Reverend.
Though they know that the flatterer knows the falshood of his own flatteries, yet they love the impostor, and with both arms bug the abuse. South's Sermons.
Mark with what joy he hugs the dear discovery! Rowe.
3. To hold fast.
Age makes us most fondly bug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them. Alsted.
HUG. n. f. [from the noun.] Close embrace.
Why these close hugs? I owe my shame to him. Goy.
HUGE. adj. [hough, high, Dutch.]
1. Vast; immense.
Let the state of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford; and who sees not what huge difference there was between them? Hooker, b. iv.
This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalled in greatness not only Asia, Europe and Africa, but America. Alsted.
2. Great even to deformity or terrible. Shakef.
The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder.
Through forests huge, and long untravell'd heaths,
With desolation brown he wanders waste. Thomson's Spring.
HUGELY. adv. [from huge.]
1. Immenely; enormously.
Who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea? Shakef. As you like it.
2. Greatly; very much.
I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourself in our affairs, it is for our good. Swift.
HUGENESS. n. f. [from huge.] Enormous bulk; greatness.
My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
HUGGERMUGGER. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from bug or morder, or hug in the dark. Morder in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by Sir Thomas More, Uoker moker.
Hoker, in Chaucer, is pecyish, crossgrained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hoake is likewise in German a corner, and mok is in English dark. I know not how to determine.] Secrecy; by-place.
Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of goods and land. Habberd's Tale.
But if I can but find them out,
Where e'er th' in huggermugger lurk,
I'll make them rue their handy-work. Hudibras, p. i.
There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and barefaced, and a thing that's done in huggermugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment. L'Estrange's Fables.
HUG'Y. adj. [See HUGE.] Vast; great; huge.
This buggy rock one finger's force
Apparently will move. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
HUKE. n. f. [huque, French.] A cloak.
As we were thus in conference, there came one that seem'd to be a messenger in a rich huke. Bacon's New Atlantis.
HULK. n. f. [hulke, Dutch; pulc, Saxon.]
1. The body of a ship.
There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuffed in the hold. Shakef.

HUM

The custom they had of giving the colour of the sea to the hulks, sails, and mariners of their spy-boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti. Arbutnot.
They Argo's hulk will tax,
And scrape her pitchy sides for wax. Swift.
The footy hulk Thomson's Autumn.
Steer'd sluggish on.
2. Anything bulky and unwieldy. This sense is still retained in Scotland: as, a hulk of a fellow.
And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk fir John,
Is prisoner to your son. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.
To HULK. v. a. To exenterate: as, to hulk a hare. Ainsw.
HULL. n. f. [hulgan, Gothick, to cover.]
1. The hulk or integument of any thing; the outer covering:
as, the hull of a nut covers the shell. [Hule, Scottish.]
2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and hulk are now confounded; but hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.
So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a sensible and thinking creature.
Grew's Colloq. Sac. b. i. c. 5.
To HULL. v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.
They faw a fight full of piteous strangeness; a ship, or rather the carcass of the ship, or rather some few bones of the carcass, hulling there, part broken, part burned, and part drowned. Sidney.
Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.
—No, good swabber, I am to hull here a little longer. Shak.
He look'd, and saw the ark hull on the flood,
Which now abated. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. xi.
People walking down upon the shore, saw somewhat come hulling toward them. L'Estrange.
HULLY. adj. [from hull.] Silique; husky. Ainsworth.
HULLYER. n. f. Holly.
Save hullyer and thorn, thereof flail for to make. Thissel.
To HUM. v. a. [hummen, Dutch.]
1. To make the noise of bees.
The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing. Bacon.
An airy nation flew,
Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew
In Summer's heat. Dryden's En. b. vi.
So weary bees in little cells repose;
But if night-robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxen city grows. Dryden.
2. To make an inarticulate and buzzing sound.
I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me. Shakef.
Upon my honour, sir, I heard a humming.
And that a strange one too, which did awake me. Shakef.
The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, you'll rue. Shakef. Macbeth.
3. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.
Having pump'd up all his wit,
And hum'd upon it, thus he writ. Hudibras, p. iii.
I still acquiesce,
And never hum'd and haw'd sedition,
Nor snuffed treason. Hudibras, p. iii. cant. 2.
The man lay humming and hawing a good while; but, in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians. L'Estrange.
Still humming on, their drowsy course they keep,
And last'd so long, like tops, are last'd asleep. Pope.
4. To sing low.
The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate humming; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs. Glauco. Apol.
Hum half a tune. Pope.
5. To applaud. Approbation was commonly expressed in publick assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.
Hum. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The noise of bees or insects.
To black Hecate's summons
The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hum,
Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
To him who mufes through the woods at noon. Thomson.
2. The noise of bustling crowds.
From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,
The hum of either army still sounds. Shakef. Hen. V.
Tower'd cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men. Milton.
One theatre there is of vast resort,
Which whilome of requests was call'd the court;
But now the great exchange of news 'tis high,
And full of hum and buz from noon 'till night. Dryden.
3. Any low dull noise.
Who sat the nearest, by the words o'ercome,
Slept fast; the distant nodded to the hum. Pope's Dunciad.

HUM

4. A pause with an inarticulate sound.
These thrugs, these *hum*s and haws,
When you have said the's goodly, come between,
'Ere you can say the's honest. Shakef. Winter's Tale.
Your excus's want some grains to make 'em current: hum
and ha will not do the business. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
5. In Hudibras it seems used for ham.
And though his countrymen the Huns,
Did stew their meat between their hums
And the horses backs o'er which they straddle,
And ev'ry man eat up his saddle. Hudibras, p. i. cant. ii.
6. An expression of applause.
You hear a hum in the right place. Spectator.
HUM. interject. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.
Let not your ears despite the heaviest found
That ever yet they heard.
—Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
See fir Robert—hum! Pope.
And never laugh for all my life to come.
HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Latin; humain, French.]
1. Having the qualities of a man.
It will not be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature. Swift.
2. Belonging to man.
The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakef.
For man to tell how human life began
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew? Milton's P. L.
Thee, serpent, subtil'it beaft of all the field,
I knew; but not with human voice indu'd. Milt. Par. Lost.
Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any,
this being the height of all human certainty. Locke.
HUMANÉ. adj. [humaine, French.] Kind; civil; benevolent;
good-natured.
Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable. Bacon's Essays.
Envy, malice, covetousness and revenge are abolished: a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more humane, are planted in their stead. Spratt's Sermons.
HUMANELY. adv. [from humane.] Kindly; with good-nature.
If they would yield us the superfluity, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shakespeare.
HUMANIST. n. f. [humaniste, French.] A philologist; a grammarian.
HUMANITY. n. f. [humanité, French; humanitas, Latin.]
1. The nature of man.
Look to thyself; reach not beyond humanity. Sidney.
A rarer spirit never did steer humanity. Shakespeare.
The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. Shakef. Timon of Athens.
To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.
2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.
If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his informations. Glauco.
3. Benevolence; tenderness.
All men ought to maintain peace, and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke.
How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And court the offices of soft humanity?
Like thee reserve their raiment for the naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep? Rowe.
4. Philology; grammatical studies.
To HUMANIZE. v. a. [humaniser, French.] To soften; to make susceptible of tenderness or benevolence.
Here will I paint the characters of woe,
And here my faithful tears in showers shall flow,
To humanize the flints whereon I tread. Wotton.
Was it the business of magick to humanize our natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Addison on the Christian Religion.
HUMANKIND. n. f. [human and kind.] The race of man; mankind.
Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and humankind. Pope.

Thus the present happy prospect of our affairs, humanly speaking, may seem to promise. Asterbury.
2. Kindly; with good-nature. This should be humanely.
Though learn'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere;
Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope's Ess. on Criticism.
HUM'BIRD. n. f. [from hum and bird.] The humming bird.
All ages have conceived the wren the least of birds, yet our own plantations have shew'd us one far less; that is, the humbird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown's Vulg. Err.
HUMBLE. adj. [humile, French; humilis, Latin.]
1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.
And mighty proud to humble weak does yield. Fairy Q.
Now

HUM

Now we have shewn our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a doing. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Thy humble fervant vows obedience,
And faithful service, 'till the point of death. Shak. H. VI.
We should be as humble in our imperfections and sins as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
Chuse you for me; for well you understand
But if an humble husband may request,
Provide and order all things for the best. Dryden.
Ten thousand trifles light as these,
Nor can my rage nor anger move:
She should be humble, who would please;
And the must suffer, who can love. Prior.
2. Low; not high; not great.
Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow-poet, Cowley mark!
Above the skies let thy proud musick found,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.
Denied what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,
An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Yalden.
Ah! prince, hadst thou but known the joys which dwell
With humbler fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty. Rowe.
Far humbler titles suit my lost condition. Smith.
To HUMBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To make humble; to make submissive; to make to bow down with humility.
Take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues
Have humbled to all strokes. Shakefp. King Lear.
The executioner
Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon. Shakefp. As you like it.
Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you. 1 Pet. v. 6.
Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart. 2 Chro.
Why do I humble thus myself, and suing
For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate. Milton.
Let the sinner put away the evil of his doings, and humble himself by a speedy and sincere repentance: let him return to God, and then let him be assured that God will return to him. Rogers's Sermons.
2. To crush; to break; to subdue; to mortify.
Yearly injoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride, and joy, for man seduc'd. Milt. P. L.
We are pleas'd, by some implicit kind of revenge, to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, who had so far rais'd himself above us. Addison's Spectat.
The mistress of the world, the seat of empire,
The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,
That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth. Addis. Cato.
Men that make a kind of insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the publick tranquillity. Freeholder.
Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;
Though double tax'd, how little have I lost!
3. To make to confound.
This would not be to confound to their capacities, when he humbles himself to speak to them, but to lose his design in speaking. Locke.
4. To bring down from an height.
In process of time the highest mountains may be humbled into valleys; and again, the lowest valleys exalted into mountains. Hakewill on Providence.

HUMBLENESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humility; abience of pride.
With how true humbleness
They look'd down to triumph over pride! Sidney.
I am rather with all subjected humbleness to thank her excellencies, since the duty therunto gave me rather heart to fave myself, than to receive thanks for a deed which was her only inspiring. Sidney, b. i.
It was answered by us all, in all possible humbleness; but yet with a countenance, that we knew that he spoke it but merrily. Bacon's New Atlantis.
A grain of glory, mixt with humbleness,
Cures both a fever and lethargickness. Herbert.
HUMBLER. n. f. [from humble.] One that humbles or subdues himself or others.

HUMBLV. adv. [from humble.]
1. Without pride; with humility.
They were us'd to bend,
To send their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come humbly as they us'd to creep to holy altars. Shakefp.
Here the tam'd Euphrates humbly glides,
And there the Rhine submits her swelling tides. Dryden.
Write him down a slave, who, humbly proud,
With presents begs preferments from the crowd. Dryden.
In midst of dangers, fears, and death,
Thy goodness I'll adore;
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humbly hope for more. Addison's Spectator.
2. Without height; without elevation.
HUMDRUM. adj. [from hum, drone, or humming drone.] Dull;
dronish; stupid.
Shall we, quoth she, stand still humdrum,
And see stout Bruin all alone,
By numbers basely overthrown? Fludibras, p. i.
I was talking with an old humdrum fellow, and, before I had heard his story out, was called away by business. Addison.
To HUMECT. v. a. [humectio, Latin; humectier, Fr.]
To HUMECTATE. v. a. To wet; to moisten.
The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and temperate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate
the earth by their annual inundations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Her rivers are wheeled up into small cataracts, and so divided into sluices, to humectate the bordering soil, and make it wonderfully productive. Huet's Vocal Torrey.
The medicaments are of a cool humecting quality, and not too much astringent. Wyseman's Surgery.
HUMECTATION. n. f. [humectation, Fr. from humectare.] The act of wetting; moistening.
Plates of brass, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling: the cause is repercutiō, without humectation, or entrance of any body. Bacon's Natural History.
That which is concreted by exiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation, as earth and clay.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HUMERAL. adj. [humeral, Fr. from humerus, Latin.] Belonging to the shoulder.
The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation. Sharp.
HUMICUBATION. n. f. [hum and cubo, Latin.] The act of lying on the ground.
Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humidita- tions, used to be companions of repentance. Bramhall.
HUMID. adj. [humide, French; humidus, Lat.] Wet; moist; watery.
Iris there, with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers of more mingl'd hue
Than her purple scarf can shew. Milton.
The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes,
And first her husband on the poop espies. Dryden.
If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton's Opt.
HUMIDITY. n. f. [humiditē, Fr. from humid.] That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies. It differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the con-gruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quicksilver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to;
but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water itself, that wets almost every thing, and is the great standard of hu- midity, is not capable of wetting every thing; for it stands and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages, and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl. Quincy.
We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watry pumpion: we'll teach him to know truths from jays. Shakespeare.
O blessing-breeding fun, draw from the earth
Rotten humidity: below thy sister's orb Infect the air. Shakefp. Timon of Athens.
Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and refining. Arbutnot on Diet.
HUMILIATION. n. f. [French.]
1. Defect from greatness; act of humility.
The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humi- liation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter

HUM

latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker, b. v. f. 55.
Thy humiliation shall exalt
With thee thy manhood also to this throne. Milt. Pa. Leg.
2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.
John fared poorly, according unto the apparel he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humi- liation and repentance. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
With tears
Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milt. Pa. Leg.
3. Abatement of pride.
It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country. Swift.
HUMILITY. n. f. [humilitē, French.]
1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.
When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.
I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;
I thank my God for my humility. Shakefp. Richard III.
What the height of a king tempteth to revenge, the humi- lity of a Christian teacheth to forgive. King Charles.
The humility of the style gained them many friends. Clarend.
There are some that use Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder
At their wif'd journey's end. Denham's Sephy.
It is an easy matter, when there is no danger of a trial, to extol humility in the midst of honours, or to begin a fast after dinner. Squib's Sermons.
As high towers, for their airy steep,
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;
So low did her secure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humility. Dryden.
2. Act of submission.
With these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided the present storm. Davies.
HUMMER. n. f. [from hum.] An applauder. Ainsworth.

mours.
This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers. Harvey on Consumptions.
HUMORIST. n. f. [humoristo, Italian; humoriste, French.]
1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy; one who gratifies his own humour.
The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist. Spectator.
The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleas'd, or greatly displeas'd, with little things; his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things. Watt's Logick.
This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants,
and gives a vast refuse of his superfluities to purchase heaven.
Addison's Spectator.
2. One who has violent and peculiar passions.
By a wife and timous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty. Bacon to Villiers.
HUMOROUS. adj. [from humor.]
1. Full of grotesque or odd images.
Some of the commentators tell us, that Marfya was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the satire Marfyas, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous. Addison on Italy.
Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot;
And pensive, wav'ring, melancholy,
Thou dread'st and hop'st thou know'st not what. Prior.
2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.
I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; hasty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety.
He's humorous as Winter, and as sudden
As flaws congeal'd in the spring of day, Shakefp. Hen. IV.
O, you awake then: come away,
Times be short, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not stay;
What doth make you thus delay?
Vast is his courage, boundless is his mind,
Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind. Ben. Johnson.
Dryden.

HUM

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs. Watt's Logick.
1. Pleasant; jocular. Ainsworth.
HUMOROUSLY. adj. [from humorous.]
1. Merrily; jocosely.
A cabinet of medals Juvenal calls, very humorously, con- cijum argenti in titulos facie, que minutat. Addison on Medals.
We resolve by halves, and unadvisedly; we resolve rashly, fillily, or humorously, upon no reasons that will hold. Calamy.
It has been humorously said, that some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.
2. With caprice; with whim.
HUMOROUSNESS. n. f. [from humorous.] Fickleness; capricious levity.
HUMORSOME. adj. [from humour.]
1. Peevish; petulant.
2. Odd; humorous.
Our science cannot be much improved by masquerades, where the wit of both sexes is altogeth taken up in continuing singular and humorsome disguises. Swift.
HUMORSOMELY. adv. [from humorsome.] Peevishly; petulantly.
HUMOUR. n. f. [humour, French; humor, Latin.]
1. Moisture.
The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the periplicity and fluidity of common water. Ray on the Creation.
2. The different kind of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper of mind.
Believe not these suggestions, which proceed
From anguish of the mind and humours black,
That mingle with thy fancy. Milton's Agonistes.
3. General turn or temper of mind.
As there is no humour, to which impudent poverty cannot make itself serviceable; so were there enow of those of deperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin. Sidney, b. ii.
There came with her a young lord, led hither with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whole goodness he sees not. Sidney.
King James, as he was a prince of great judgment, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humour: as he was going through Lufen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was; they said Lufen. He asked, a good while after, what town is this we are now in? They said still it was Lufen: said the king, I will be king of Lufen. Bacon's Apophthegms.
Examine how your humour is inclin'd,
And which the ruling passion of your mind. Roscommon.
They, who were acquainted with him, know his humour to be such, that he would never constrain himself. Dryden.
In cases where it is necessary to make examples, it is the humour of the multitude to forget the crime, and to remember the punishment. Addison's Freeholder.
Good humour only teaches charms to last,
Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past. Pope.
4. Present disposition.
It is the curse of kings to be attended
By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant
To break into the blood-house of life. Shakefp. K. John.
Another thought her nobler humour fed. Fairfax, b. ii.
Their humours are not to be won,
But when they are impos'd upon. Hadibras, p. iii.
Tempt not his heavy hand;
But one submissive word which you let fall,
Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.
5. Grotesque imagery; jocularly; merriment.
6. Diseased or morbid disposition.
He was a man frank and generous; when well, denied himself nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humours, and made his fits of the gout frequent and violent. Temple.
7. Petulance; peevishness.
Is my friend all perfection, all virtue and discretion? Has he not humours to be endured, as well as kindnesses to be enjoyed? South's Sermons.
8. A trick; a practice.
I like not the humour of lying: he hath wronged me in some humours: I should have born the humour'd letter to her.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
9. Caprice; whim; predominant inclination.
In private, men are more bold in their own humours; and in comfort, men are more obnoxious to others humours; therefore it is good to take both. Bacon's Essays.
To HUMOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To gratify; to soothe by compliance.
If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men;
if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow. Shakefp.
If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,
He should not humour me. Shakefp. Julius Caesar.

Obedience

HUN

Obedience and subjection were never enjoined by God to humour the passions, lusts, and vanities of those who are commanded to obey our governors. Swift.

You humour me, when I am sick; Pope.
Why not when I am splenetic?
Children are fond of something which strikes their fancy most, and sullen and regardless of every thing else, if they are not humoured in that fancy. Watts's Logick.

2. To fit; to comply with.
To after age thou shalt be writ the man,
That with smooth air couldst humour best our tongue. Milt.
Tis my part to invent, and the musicians to humour that invention. Dryden's Preface to Albion.

Fountainbleau is situated among rocks and woods, that give a fine variety of savage prospects: the king has humoured the genius of the place, and only made use of so much art as is necessary to regulate nature. Addison's Guardian.

HUMP. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from bump. See BUMP.] The protuberance formed by a crooked back.
These defects were mended by succeeding matches; the eyes were opened in the next generation, and the bump fell. Tatler, No. 74.

HUMPHACK. n. f. [bump and back.] Crooked back; high shoulders.
The chief of the family was born with an humphack and very high nose. Tatler.

HUMPHACKED. adj. Having a crooked back.
To HUNCH. v. a. [hunch, German.]

1. To strike or punch with the fists.
Jack's friends began to hunch and push one another: why don't you go and cut the poor fellow down? Arbutnot.

2. [Hucker, a crooked back, German.] To crook the back.
Thy crooked mind within hunch'd out thy back,
And wander'd in thy limbs: to thy own kind
Make love, if thou canst find it in the world. Dryden.

HUNCHBACKED. adj. [hunch and back.] Having a crooked back.
His person deformed to the highest degree, flat-nosed, and hunchbacked. L'Estrange.

But I more fear Creon!
To take that hunchback'd monster in my arms,
Th' excrecence of a man. Dryd. and Lee's Oedipus.

The second daughter was peevish, haggard, pale, with fauceryes, a sharp nose, and hunchbacked. Arbutnot. Hist. of J. Bull.

HUNDRED. adj. [humb, humbet, Saxon; benderd, Dutch.] The number consisting of ten multiplied by ten.

A bafe, proud, three futed, hundred pound, filthy, worsted flocking knave. Shakespeare's King Lear.

A hundred altars in her temple smoke,
A thousand bleeding hearts her pow'r invoke. Dryd. Æn.
Many thousands had seen the transactions of our Saviour, and many hundred thousands received an account of them from the mouths of those who were eye-witnesses. Addison.

HUNDRED. n. f.
1. A company or body consisting of an hundred.

Very few will take this proposition, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle: whosoever does so, will have reason to think hundreds of propositions innate. Locke.

Lands, taken from the enemy, were divided into centuries or hundreds, and distributed amongst the soldiers. Arbutnot.

2. A canton or division of a county, perhaps once containing an hundred manors. [Hundredum, low Latin; hunderede, old French.]

Imposits upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire. Bacon.

For justice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket usually sat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raised: here complaints were exhibited. Hayw.

HUNDRETH. adj. [hundred, Saxon.] The ordinal of an hundred; the tenth ten times told.

We shall not need to use the hundredth part of that time, which themselves bestow in making invectives. Hooker.

If this medium is rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturn, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop any where. Newton's Opt.

HUNG. The preterite and part. pass. of hang.
A wife so hung with virtues, such a freight,
What mortal shoulders can support! Dryden's Juvenal.

A room that is richly adorned, and hung round with a great variety of pictures, strikes the eye at once. Watts.

HUNGER. n. f. [hunger, Saxon; hanger, Dutch.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.
An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food. When the stomach is empty, and the fibres in their natural tension, they draw up so close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation: but when they are distended with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we say a person has fasted away his stomach; and this is occasioned by the attrition of the coats of the stomach against each other. Quincy.

Thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger and in thirst. Deutr. xxviii. 48.

The sub-acid part of the animal spirits, being cast off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the stomach, vellicates the fibres, and thereby produces the sense we call hunger. Greav.

Something viscous, fat and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the sensation of hunger. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Any violent desire.
The immaterial felicities we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hungers for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

To HUNGER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel the pain of hunger.
Widely they gape, and to the eye they roar,
As if they hungred for the food they bore. Cowley.

2. To desire with great eagerness.
Do'st thou so hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with my honours,
Before thy hour be ripe? O, foolish youth,
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee!
Stay but a little. Shakespeare's Henry IV. p. ii.

My more having, would be as a sauce
To make me hunger more. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I content me,
And from the sting of famine fear no harm,
Nor mind it, fed with better thoughts that feed
Me hungring more to do my father's will. Milton's P. Lof.

HUNGERBIT. } adj. [hunger and bit.] Pained or weak.
HUNGERBITTEN. } ended with hunger.
His strength shall be hungerbitten, and destruction shall be ready at his side. Job xviii. 12.

Thyself
Bred up in poverty and straits at home;
Lost in a desert here, and hungerbit. Milton's Parad. Reg.

HUNGERLY. adj. [from hunger.] Hungry; in want of nourishment.

His beard
Grew thin and hungerly, and seem'd to ake
His lips as he was drinking. Shakef. Taming of the Shrew.

HUNGERLY. adv. With keen appetite.
You have sav'd my longings, and I feed
Most hungerly on your sight. Shak. Timon of Alen.

They are all but stomachs, and we all but food;
They eat us hungerly, and, when they're full,
They belch us. Shakespeare's Othello.

HUNGERSTARVED. adj. [hunger and starved.] Starved with hunger; pinched by want of food.

All my followers to th' eager foe
Turn back, and fly like ships before the wind,
Or lambs pursu'd by hungerstarved wolves. Shakef. H. VI.

O'erake me, if thou canst; I scorn thy strength:
Go, go, cheer up thy hungerstarved men. Shakef. H. VI.

As to some holy house th' afflicted came,
Th' hungerstarv'd, the naked, and the lame,
Want and diseases, fled before her name. Dryden.

HUNGRED. adj. [from hunger.] Pinched by want of food.
Odours do in a small degree nourish, and we see men an hungred love to smell hot bread. Bacon's Natural History.

HUNGRILY. adv. [from hungerly.] With keen appetite.
Thus much to the kind rural gods we owe,
Who pity'd suff'ring mortals long ago;
When on harsh acorns hungerly they fed,
And gave 'em nicer palates, better bread. Dryden's Juven.

HUNGRY. adj. [from hunger.]

1. Feeling pain from want of food.
That face of his hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. iii.

They that talk thus may say that a man is always hungry, but that he does not always feel it; whereas hunger consists in that very sensation. Locke.

2. Not fat; not fruitful; not prolific; more disposed to draw from other substances than to impart to them.
Cassius has a lean and hungry look. Shakef. Jul. Cesar.

The more fat water will bear soap best; for the hungry water doth kill its unctuous nature. Bacon's Natural History.

In rusty grounds springs are found at the first and second spit, and sometimes lower in a hungry gravel. Mortimer.

To this great day of retribution our Saviour refers us, for reaping the fruits that we here sow in the most hungry and barren soil. Smalbridge's Sermons.

HUNKS. n. f. [hunkur, fordid, Islandick.] A covetous fordid wretch; a miser; a curmudgeon.
The old hunks was well served, to be tricked out of a whole hog for the securing of his puddings. L'Estrange.

She has a husband, a jealous, covetous, old hunk. Dryden.
Irus has given all the intimations of being a close hunk. Addison's Spectator.

To

HUN

To HUNT. v. a. [huntian, Saxon, from hune, a dog.]

1. To chase wild animals.
The man that once did sell the lion's skin,
While the beast liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him. Shak. H. V.

Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions?
We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison's Spectator.

2. To pursue; to follow close.
Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Pf. cxi.
The heart strikes five hundred fort of pulses in an hour, and is hunted unto such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that faint would it break. Harvey on Consumptions.

3. To search for.
Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Spenser.

All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from the principles it is pretended to be built upon: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.
He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison's Spectator.

To HUNT. v. n.
1. To follow the chase.
When he returns from hunting,
I will not speak with him. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Esau went to the field to hunt for venison. Gen. xxvii. 5.
One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting. Locke.

On the old pagan tombs masks, hunting matches, and Bacchanals are very common. Addison on Italy.

2. To pursue or search.
Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.
The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd
By sov'reign pow'r, her company disdain'd, Grinn'd as they pass'd. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

2. A chase.
The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;
The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green. Shakef.

3. Pursuit.
I've heard myself proclaim'd;
And by the happy hollow of a tree,
Escap'd the hunt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

HUNTER. n. f. [from hunt.]
1. One who chases animals for pastime.

If those English lords had been good hunters, and reduced the mountains, bogges, and woods within the limits of forests, chaces and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Davies on Ireland.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milt. Par. Lof.

Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guileless gore. Dryden's Æn.

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a passage of Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron. Addison on Italy.

Bold Nimrod first the savage chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that scents game or beasts of prey.
Of dogs, the valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the flow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakef. Macbeth.

HUNTINGHORN. n. f. [hunting and horn.] A bugle; a horn used to cheer the hounds.

Whilft a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

HUNTRESS. n. f. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy hunter's name, that my full life doth sway. Shakef.

Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?
Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train;
Nor envy Windsor. Pope's Windsor Forest.

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Broom.

1. One who delights in the chase.
Like as a huntress, after weary chase,

HUR

Seeing the game escape from him away, Spenser's Sonnets.
Sits down to rest him.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What huntman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chase? Waller.

2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chase.
Apply this moral rather to the huntman, that managed the chase, than to the master. L'Estrange's Fables.

HUNTSMANSHIP. n. f. [from huntman.] The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give th' art of rhiming, huntman'ship, or play. Donne.

HURDLE. n. f. [Hjrtel, Saxon.] A texture of sticks woyen together; a crate.
Settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither. Shakespeare.

The blacksmith was hanged, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn; taking pleasure upon the hurdle, to think that he should be famous in after times. Bacon's Henry VII.

The sled, the tumbrel, hurdles and the flail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden's Georg.

HURDS. n. f. The refuse of hemp or flax.
To HURL. v. a. [from hurle, to throw down, Islandick; or, according to Skinner, from whirl.]

1. To throw with violence; to drive impetuously.
If heav'n have any grievous plagues in store,
O, let them keep it 'till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee. Shakespeare's Richard III.

He holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law. Shak. R. III.
I with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame. Shakef. Henry VI.

If he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait. Num. xxxv. 20.

They use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones. Chron. xii. 2.

Hurl ink and wit,
As madmen stones. Ben. Johnson.

His darling sons,
Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
Their frail original and faded bliss. Milton's Parad. Lof.

She strikes the lute; but if it found,
Threatens to hurl it on the ground. Waller.

Corrupted light of knowledge hurl'd
Sin, death, and ignorance o'er all the world. Denham.

Young Phaeton,
From East to North irregularly hurl'd,
First set himself on fire, and then the world. Dryd. Juven.

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,
And hurl them headlong to their fleet and main. Pope's Iliad.

2. To utter with vehemence. [Hurler, French, to make an howling or hideous noise.]

The glad merchant that does view
His ship far come from watry wilderness,
He hurls out vows. Spenser.

Highly they rag'd against the Higheft,
Hurling defiance toward the vault of heav'n. Milton.

3. To play at a kind of game.
Hurling taketh its denomination from throwing of the ball, and is of two sorts; to goals, and to the country: for hurling to goals there are fifteen or thirty players, more or less, chosen out on each side, who strip themselves, and then join hands in ranks, one against another: out of these ranks they match themselves by pairs, one embracing another, and so pass away; every of which couple are to watch one another during this play. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HURL. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult; riot; commotion.
He in the same hurl murdering such as he thought would withstand his desire, was chosen king. Knolles.

HURLBAT. n. f. [hurl and bat.] Whirlbat.
HURLER. n. f. [from hurl.] One that plays at hurling.
The hurlers must hurl man to man, and not two set upon one man at once. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HURLWIND. n. f. [hurl and wind.] A whirlwind; a violent gust. A word not in use.

Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid hurlwinds from his mansion thrown. Sandys.

HURLY. n. f. [I have been told that this word owes its Hurly and Burly, or Hurleigh and Burleigh, which filled their part of the kingdom with contests and violence. If this account be rejected, the word must be derived from hurl, burly, and burly, a ludicrous reduplication. Hurlade, French; hurlubrus, inconsiderately.] Tumult; commotion; bustle.

Winds take the ruffian billows by the top,
That with the hurly death itself awakes. Shakef. H. IV.

Poor discontented,
Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurlyburly innovation. Shakef. Henry IV. p. i.

11 Q

Methinks,

HUR

Methinks, I see this hurly all on foot. Shakesp. K. John.
All places were filled with tumult and hurlyburly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, as in cities presently to be besieged. Knollet.
HURRICANE. } n. f. [huracan, Spanish; ouragan, French.] A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the eastern hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricanes spout. Shakesp. K. Lear.
A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havock where it comes. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and blustering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends withdraw;
There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,
Whispering like winds, ere hurricanes arise. Dryden.
So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away. Addison.
To HURRY. v. a. [pengyan, to plunder, Saxon; hurs was like a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends. Shakespeare.
For whom all this haste
Of midnight march, and hurried meeting here? Milton.
Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy the cravings of it. South's Sermons.

That hurried o'er
Such swarms of English to the neighb'ring shore. Dryden.
A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage. Addison's Spectator.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That hurries you away. Rowe's Royal Convert.
If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

To HURRY. v. n. To move on with precipitation.
Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not hurry to your journey's end. Dryd. Aurengz.
HURRY. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult; precipitation; commotion.

And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility. Shakesp. Henry V.
Her plenteous womb
Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry. Shakespeare.

The feeds of virtue may, by the husbandry of Christian counsel, produce better fruit than the strength of self-nature. Raleigh's History of the World.
Husbandry the Spaniards wanting in the valley of Mexico, could not make our wheat bear seed. Raleigh's H. of the World.
A family governed with order, will fall naturally to the several trades of husbandry, tillage, and pasturage. Temple.

Let any one consider the difference between an acre of land sown with wheat, and an acre of the same land lying without any husbandry upon it, and he will find that the improvement of labour makes the value. Locke.
2. Thrift; frugality; parsimony.

There's husbandry in heaven;
The candles are all out. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
You have already faved several millions to the publick, and that what we ask is too inconsiderable to break into any rules of the strictest good husbandry. Swift.

3. Care of domestic affairs.
Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house. Shakespeare.
HUSH. interj. [Without etymology.] Silence! be still! no noise!

The king hath done you wrong; but hush! 'tis so. Shak.
There's something else to do; hush and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr'd. Shakespeare's Tempest.
HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.] Still; silent; quiet.

As we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heav'n's, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
To HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.] To be still; to be silent.

This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame did blush;
Another seem'd envious or coy;
Another in her teeth did gnaw a rush;
But at these strangers' presence every one did hush. F. Queen.

To HUSH. v. a. To still; to silence; to quiet; to appease.
Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be hush, and nought at all to say. Shakesp. Rich. II.
It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your husbandry usage of the pope;
But since you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your bluffing land. Sh. K. John.

Speak softly;
All's hush as midnight yet. Shakespeare's Tempest.
My love would speak; my duty hushes me. Shakespeare.
When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads,
Wilt thou then talk thus to me? Wilt thou then Hush my cares thus, and shelter me with love? Orway.

Hush'd as midnight silence go;
He will not have your acclamations now. Dryden.
Her fire at length is kind,
Calms ev'ry storm, and hushes ev'ry wind;
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas. Dryden.

HUT

Upon his rising the court was hushed, and a whisper ran. Addison's Spectator.
To HUSH. v. a. To suppress in silence; to forbid to be mentioned.
This matter is hushed up, and the servants are forbid to talk of it. Pope.

HUSHMONEY. n. f. [hush and money.] A bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.
A dextrous steward, when his tricks are found,
Hushmoney sends to all the neighbours round;
His master, unobservant of his pranks,
Pays all the cost, and gives the villain thanks. Swift.

HUSK. n. f. [hulsch, Dutch, or huycken, from huy.] The outmost integument of fruits.
Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men. Slak. H. V.
Most feeds, in their growing, leave their husk or rind about the root. Bacon's Natural History.

Thy food shall be
The fresh brook mussels, withered roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Fruits of all kinds, in coat
Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husks, or shell
She gathers; tribute large! and on the board
Heaps with unparing hand. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Some steep their feeds, and some in cauldrons boil
O'er gentle fires, the exuberant juice to drain,
And swell the flatt'ring husks with fruitful grain. Dryden.
Some when the press, by utmost vigour screw'd,
Has drain'd the pulposus mafs, regale their swine
With the dry refuse; thou, more wife, shalt steep
The husks in water, and again employ
The pond'rous engine. Phillips.

Barley for ptisan was first steeped in water 'till it swelled; afterwards dried in the sun, then beat 'till the husk was taken off, and ground. Arbutnot on Coins.
Do not content yourselves with mere words, left you only amass a heap of unintelligible phrases, and feed upon husks instead of kernels. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

To HUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip off the outward integument.
HUSKED. adj. [from husk.] Bearing an husk; covered with a husk.
HUSKY. adj. [from husk.] Abounding in husks; consisting of husks.

Most have found
A husky harvest from the grudging ground. Dryden's Virgil.
With timely care
Shave the goat's shaggy beard, lest thou too late
In vain shouldst seek a strainer, to dispart
The husky terrene dregs from purer must. Phillips.

HUSSEY. n. f. [corrupted from housewife; taken in an ill sense.] A forry or bad woman; a worthless wench. It is often used ludicrously in slight disapprobation.
Get you in, hussy, go: now will I personate this hopeful young jade. Southern's Innocent Adultery.

HUSTINGS. n. f. [hýrings, Saxon.] A council; a court held.
To HUSTLE. v. a. [perhaps corrupted from hurtle.] To shake together.
HUSWIFE. n. f. [corrupted from housewife.]
1. A bad manager; a forry woman. It is common to use housewife in a good, and huswife or hussy in a bad sense. Bianca.

A huswife, that, by selling her desires,
Buys herself bread and cloth. Shakespeare's Othello.
2. An economist; a thrifty woman.
Why should you want?
The bounteous huswife, nature, on each bush
Lays her fulness before you. Shakespeare.

To HUSWIFE. v. a. [from the noun.] To manage with economy and frugality.
But huswifery the little heav'n had lent,
She duly paid a groat for quarter-rent;
And pinch'd her belly, with her daughters two,
To bring the year about with much ado. Dryden.

HUSWIFERY. n. f. [from huswife.]
1. Management good or bad.
Good huswifery trieth
To rise with the cock;
Ill huswifery lyeth
'Till nine of the clock. Tusser.

2. Management of rural business committed to women.
If cheeques in dairie have Argus his eyes,
Tell Cistley the fault in her huswifery lies. Tuss. Husbandry.

HUT. n. f. [hutte, Saxon; hute, French.] A poor cottage.
Our wand'ring fairs, in woful state,
To a small cottage came at last,
Where dwelt a good old honest yeoman,
Who kindly did these fairs invite
In his poor hut to pass the night. Swift.

HYD

Sore pierc'd by wintry wind,
How many shrink into the fordid hut
Of cheerless poverty. Thomson.
HUTCH. n. f. [hyacca, Saxon; huche, French.] A corn chest.
The best way to keep them, after they are threshed, is to dry them well, and keep them in hutches, or close calks. Mort.
To Huzz. v. n. [from the sound.] To buzz; to murmur.
HUZZA'. interj. A shout; a cry of acclamation.
The buzzas of the rabble are the same to a bear that they are to a prince. L'Estrange.
It was an unfair thing in you to keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night, with buzzas and hunting horns never let me cool. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
All fame is foreign, but of true desert;
Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart:
One self-approving hour whole years outweighs
Of stupid flatters and of loud buzzas. Pope's Essay on Man.
To Huzzas'. v. n. [from the interjection.] To utter acclamation.
A caldron of fat beef, and sloop of ale,
On the huzzing mob shall still prevail. King's Cookery.
To Huzzas'. v. a. To receive with acclamation.
He was huzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers. Addison.
HYACINTH. n. f. [ἵακινθος; hyacinthos, Fr. hyacinthus, Lat.]
1. A plant.
It hath a bulbous root: the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked, the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed: the ovary becomes a roundish fruit with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds. Miller.
The silken fleece, impurpl'd for the loom,
Rival'd the hyacinth in vernal bloom. Pope's Odyssey.
2. The hyacinth is the same with the lapis hyacinthus of the ancients. It is a less showy gem than any of the other red ones, but not without its beauty, though not gaudy. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg. It is found of various degrees of deepness and paleness; but its colour is always a deadish red, with a considerable admixture of yellow, which even sometimes seems predominant: but its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame-colour. This gem is found in several parts of Europe; but the finest fort comes from the East and West Indies. Hill on Fossils.
HYACINTHINE. adj. [ἵακινθινος;] Made of hyacinths.
HYADES. n. f. [ἡάδες;] A watry constellation.
HYADS. n. f. [ἡάδες;] A watry constellation.
Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name
For ev'ry fix'd and ev'ry wand'ring star;
The pleiads, hyads. Dryden's Georgicks.
HYALINE. adj. [ὑάλινος;] Glassy; crystalline; made glass;
resembling glass.
From heav'n-gate not far, founded in view
On the clear hyaline, the glassy sea. Milton's Parad. Lost.
HYBRIDOUS. adj. [ἕβριδος; hybridos, Latin.] Begotten between animals of different species.
Why such different species should not only mingle together, but also generate an animal, and yet that that hybridous production should not again generate, is to me a mystery. Ray.
HYDATIDES. n. f. [from ὑδῶς;] Little transparent bladders of water in any part: most common in dropical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lymphatics; for they happen most in parts abounding with those vessels. Quincy.
All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides. Wise.
HYDRA. n. f. [ὑδρά; Latin.] A monster with many heads slain by Hercules: whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.
New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.
More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron-teeth severely grin. Dryden's Æn.
Subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew. Dryden.
HYDRAGOGUES. n. f. [ὑδραγωγός; hydragogos, Fr.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger catharticks, because they shake most forcibly by their vellations the bowels and their appendages, so as to squeeze out water enough to make the stools seem to be little else. Quincy.
HYDRAULICAL. adj. [from hydraulick.] Relating to the con-
HYDRAULICK. n. f. veyance of water through pipes.
Among the engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted not contemptible ones, and divers other hydrau-tical engines. Arbutnot's Physico-Theology.
We have employed a virtuoso to make an hydraulick engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels. Arbutnot and Pope's Moral Scriblerus.
HYDRAULICKS. n. f. [ὑδραγωγός; hydragogos, Fr.] A pipe.

kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy. Hylyffe's Paveygon.
HYDROMEL. n. f. [ὑδρομέλι; hydromel, Fr.] Honey and water.
Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern part of Europe affords, as well as one of the most ancient. Mortimer's Husb.
In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were ptisans and cream of barley; hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium. Arbutnot.
HYDROMETER. n. f. [ὑδρομέτρον;] An instrument to measure the extent of water.
HYDROMETRY. n. f. [ὑδρομετρία;] The act of measuring the extent of water.
HYDROPHOBIA. n. f. [ὑδροφοβία; hydrophobia, Fr.] Dread of water.
Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the dread of water is the most remarkable. Quincy.
HYDROPHICAL. adj. [ὑδροφικός; hydrophique, French; from HYDROPHICK. adj. hydrōpikos, Latin.] Dropical; diseased with extravasated water.
Cantharides heats the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydrophical water. Eaton's Nat. Hist.
The world's whole sap is sunk:
The general balm th' hydrophick earth hath drunk;
Whither, as to the bedstead, life is shrunk,
Dead and interr'd. Dante.
Some mens hydrophick insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.
Hydrophick swellings, if they be pure, are pellucid. Wise.
Every lust is a kind of hydrophick distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson's Sermons.
Hydrophick wretches by degrees decay,
Growing the more, the more they waste away;
By their own ruins they augmented lye,
With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry. Blackmore.
One sort of remedy he uses in dropies, viz. the water of the hydrophicks, which is a remedy for the distemper. Arbutnot.
HYDROSTATICAL. adj. [ὑδροστατική; hydrostatique, Fr.] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.
A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be recon-cilable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above; because bone, the heaviest in specie, will be ever in the midst. Bentley.
HYDROSTATICALLY. adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostatics.
The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mass. Bentley's Sermons.
HYDROSTATICKS. n. f. [ὑδροστατική; hydrostatiques, Fr.]
The science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.
HYDROTICK. n. f. [ὑδροτικός; hydrotique, French.] Purger of water or phlegm.
He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydroticks and purgers of bile. Arbutnot on Celsus.
HYEN. n. f. [hyene, French; hyena, Latin.] An animal like HYENNA. n. f. a wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.
I will weep when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a hyen, when you are inclined to sleep. Shakespeare.
A wonder more amazing would we find;
The hyena shews it, of a double kind:
Varying the sexes in alternate years,
In one begets, and in another bears. Dryden's Fables.
The hyena was indeed well joined with the beaver, as having also a bag in those parts, if thereby we understand the hyena odorata, or civet cat. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The keen hyena, fellest of the fell. Thomson's Summer.
HYGROMETER. n. f. [ὑγρομέτρον; hygrometre, French.]
An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.
A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river. Arbutnot on Air.
HYGROSCOPE. n. f. [ὑγροσκόπος; hygroscope, Fr.] An instrument to shew the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme. Quincy.
Moisture in the air is discovered by hygroscopes. Arbutnot.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;
For her white virgins hymeneal sing. Pope.
HYMENE'AL. adj. Pertaining to marriage.
The suitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice
A signal of her hymeneal choice. Pope's Odyssey.
HYMN. n. f. [ὑμνος; hymnos, Fr. hymnus, Lat.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superior being.
As I earst, in praise of mine own dame,
So now in honour of thy mother dear,
An honourable hymn I kee should frame. Spenser.
Our solemn hymns to sudden dirges change;
Our bridal flow'rs serve for a buried coarfe. Shakespeare.
When steel grows
Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made
An overture for the wars. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour. Bacon.
Farewell, you happy shades,
Where angels first should practise hymns, and string
Their tuneful harps, when they to heav'n would sing. Dryd.
To HYMN. v. a. [ὑμνίζω;] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.
To HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.
They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works. Milton.
He had not left alive this patient saint,
This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence
To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
And hymn it in the quire. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
HYMNICK. adj. [ὑμνικός;] Relating to hymns.
He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.
To HYP. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.
Have been, to the last degree, hyp'd since I saw you. Speer.
HY'PALLAGE. n. f. [ὑπάλλαξις;] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.
HY'PER. n. f. [ὑπερ;] A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick. A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.
Criticks I read on other men,
And hypers upon them again. Prior.
HYPERBOLA. n. f. [ὑπερβολή; hyperbole, Fr. hyperbole, Lat.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolical section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex. Harris.
Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas, very eccentric. Bentley's Serm.
HYPERBOLE. n. f. [ὑπερβολή; hyperbole, Fr. hyperbole, Lat.] A figure in rhe-torick by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faster than lightning. His passions are fallen to dust. He was so gaily, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him. Shaksp.
Terms unfix'd,
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperboles. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
Tassata phrases, fiken terms precise,
Three pill'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these Summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shakespeare.
They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bettows upon its admired objects. Glanv. Seepf. c. 1.
Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,
Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,
They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight. Granv.
The common people understand rallery, or at least rheto-rick, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense. Swift.

HYP

HYPERBO'ICAL. adj. [hyperbolique, French; from hyper- HYPERBO'ICK. n. f. bolos.]
1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyper- perbola.
Cancelled in the middle with squares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbolick lines. Grew's Museum.
The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure. Ray on the Creation.
2. [From hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.
It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolical, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense. Boyle.
HYPERBO'ICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolical.]
1. In form of an hyperbola.
2. With exaggeration or extenuation.
Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically. Brown.
Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.
HYPERBO'IFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.
HYPERBO'REAN. n. f. [hyperboreus, French; hyperboreus, Lat.]
Northern.
HYPERCRIT'ICK. n. f. [hypercritique, Fr. hyper and critique.]
A critick exact or captious beyond use or reason.
Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges of antiquity, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages. Dryd.
HYPERCRIT'ICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use.
We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical pun-tilios, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to. Evelyn.
Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner. Swift.
HYPERMETER. n. f. [ὑπερμετρον;] Any thing greater than the standard requires.
When a man rises beyond six foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club. Addison's Guardian.
HYPERMETER. n. f. [ὑπερμετρον;] Any medicine that induces sleep.
HYPOCHO'NDRES. n. f. [ὑποχονδρες; hypochondres, Fr. hypochondres, Lat.] The two regions lying on each side the cartilago eniformis, and those of the ribs, and the tip of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen. Quincy.
The blood moving too slowly through the celiac and mesenterick arteries, produce various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres; from whence such persons are called hypochondriack. Arbutnot on Aliments.
HYPOCHONDRICAL. adj. [hypochondriacus, French, from HYPOCHONDRICK. n. f. hypochondres.]
1. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.
Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Decay of Piety.
2. Producing melancholy.
Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected;
as in great fears, and hypochondriacal passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon's Nat. History.
HYPOCIST. n. f. [ὑποκίστις; hypociste, French.]
Hypocist is an inspissated juice in large flat masses, considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. It is brought from the Levant, sometimes from France, and other parts of Europe. The stem of the plant, from which it is produced, is thick and fleshy; and, what is singular, much thicker at the top than towards the bottom.
The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, which are gathered before they are ripe; and the juice is expressed, then evaporated over a gentle fire, formed into cakes, and dried in the sun. It is an astringent medicine of considerable power.
Hypo'crisy. n. f. [ὑποκρίσις; hypocrisis, Fr. hypocrisis, Lat.] Diffimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.
Next flood hypocrisy with holy leer,
Soft smiling and demurely looking down;
But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden's Fables.
Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint:
men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.
HYPOCRITE. n. f. [hypocrite, French; hypocrite, Lat.] A dissembler in morality or religion.

HYP

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shak.
 A wife man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Ecclus. xxxiii. 3.
 Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain; Dryden.
 Your silence argues, you ask time to reign.
 The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.
 Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass Suffices virtue: but may hypocrites,
 Who sily speak one thing, another think,
 Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwarn'd drink on,
 And through intemperance grow a while sincere. Phillips.
 HYPOCRITICAL. adj. [from hypocrite.] Dissembling; insinuating; appearing differently from the reality.
 Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
 Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be precluded a libertine. Roger's Sermons.
 Let others skew their hypocritical face. Swift.
 HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.
 Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing at once their profelytes and their religion. Government of the Tongue.
 HYPOGASTRICK. adj. [from hypogastrique, French; ὑπογαστρικὸς.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.
 The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Wise's Surgery.
 HYPOGEUM. n. s. [from ὑπογῆ and γῆ.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.
 HYPOSTASIS. n. s. [from ὑποστάσις, French; ὑποστάσις.]
 1. Distinct substance.
 2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity. The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those before comprised in the ancient more simple article. Hammond on Fundamentals.
 HYPOSTATICAL. adj. [from ὑποστατικός, French; from hypostasis.]
 1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.
 Let our Carneades warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostatical principles, till they have a little examined it. Boyle.
 2. Personal; distinctly personal.
 HYPOTENUSE. n. s. [from ὑποτενύς, Fr. ὑποτενύς.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right-angled triangle; the subtense.
 The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

HYS

HYPOTHESIS. n. s. [from ὑπόθεσις, Fr. hypothèse.] A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved.
 The mind casts and turns itself reflexly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole intelligible. South's Sermon.
 With imagin'd sovereignty
 Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns:
 He reigns: how long? 'till some usurper rise;
 And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wise,
 Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.
 HYPOTHETICAL. adj. [from ὑποθετικός, Fr. from hypothèse.] In-HYPOTHETICK. } cluding a supposition; conditional.
 Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Watts's Logic.
 HYPOTHETICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition; conditionally.
 The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubts, and hypothetically. Brame's Notes to Pope's Odyssey.
 HYST, }
 HURST, } Are all from the Saxon hysst, a wood or grove. Gill.
 HERST, }
 HYSOP. n. s. [from ὑσώπος, Fr. hyssopus, Lat. hysopus.] A verticillate plant, with long narrow leaves: the crest of the flower is roundish, erect, and divided into two parts: the beard is divided into three parts; the middle part is hollowed like a spoon, having a double point, and is somewhat winged: the whorles of the flowers are short, and at the lower part of the stalk are placed at a great distance; but toward the top are closer joined, so as to form a regular spike. It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in Scripture. Miller.
 The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop; for that is not the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls; but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.
 HYSTERICAL. adj. [from ὑστερικός, French; ὑστερικός.]
 HYSTERICK. }
 1. Troubled with fits; disordered in the regions of the womb.
 In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike such an astonishment into spectators, that they report them possessed with the devil. Harvey on Conjunction.
 Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Floyer on the Humours.
 2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.
 Parent of vapours, and of female wit,
 Who gave th' hysterick or poetick fit. Pope's Ra. of the Lock.
 This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbutnot and Pope's Mort. Scrib.
 HYSTERICKS. n. s. [from ὑστερικός.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

I.

JAC

Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.
 I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked by an e final; and a short sound, as fin, thin.
 Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken freend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as ais, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word, is always expressed by y.
I consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant; as jade, jet, jilt, jolt, just.
 1. pronoun personal. [from ich, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.]
 I, gen. me; plural we; gen. us. ic, me, pe, ur.
 1. The pronoun of the first person, myself.
 I do not like these several councils, I. Shaksp. Rich. III.
 There is none greater in this house than I. Gen. xxxix. 9.
 Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid. Mat. xiv. 27.
 What shall I do to be for ever known,
 And make the age to come my own?
 I shall like beasts or common people dye,
 Unless you write my elegy. Cowley.
 Hence, and make room for me. Cowley.
 When chance of business parts us two,
 What do our souls, I wonder, do?
 Of that book you have given us a large earnest. Cowley.
 Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,
 I to my longing friends return again. Dryden's Æn.
 2. Me is in the following passage written for I.
 There is but one man whom she can have, and that is me. Clarissa.
 3. I is more than once in Shakespeare written for ay, or yes.
 Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,
 And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more Than the death-darting eye of cockatrice. Shakespeare.
 Did your letters pierce the queen?
 —I, sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence,
 And now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shakespeare.
 To JABBER. v. n. [from jabber, Dutch.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.
 We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
 Of parties. Swift.
 JABBERER. n. s. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticulately or unintelligibly.
 Out cant the Babylonian labourers
 At all their dialects of jabberers. Hudibras, p. iii.
 JACENT. adj. [from jacens, Latin.] Lying at length.
 So laid, they are more apt in swagging down to pierce than in the jacent posture. Watson's Architect.
 JACINTH. n. s. [from hyacinth, as Jerusalem for Hierusalem.]
 1. The same with hyacinth.
 2. A gem of a deep redish yellow approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber. Woodward's Met. Foss.
 JACK. n. s. [Probably by mistake from Jaques, which in French is James.]
 1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for faucy or paltry fellows.
 I am in estimation:
 You will perceive that a Jack gardant cannot Office me from my son Coriolanus. Shakespeare.
 I have in my mind
 A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
 Which I will practise. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
 Every Jack slave hath his belly-full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match. Shaksp.
 2. The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy, as an instrument to pull off boots.

JAC

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts's Logic.
 3. An engine which turns the spit.
 The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square; that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm. Maxon.
 The ordinary jacks, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels. Wilkins's Math. Magick.
 Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth be never to smooth, yet, if not oiled, will hardly move. Ray.
 A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wise's Surgery.
 Some strain in rhyme; the mufes on their racks Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks. Pope.
 4. A young pike.
 No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jacks. Mortimer's Husbandry.
 5. [from Jaques, French.] A coat of mail.
 The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.
 6. A cup of waxed leather.
 Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio, sup
 From a foul jack, or grealy mapple cup. Dryden's Pers.
 7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.
 'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byals, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and to run spontaneously to the jack. Bentley's Sermons.
 8. A part of the musical instrument called a virginal.
 In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Bacon's Natural History.
 9. The male of animals.
 A jack ass, for a stallion, was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty-nine pounds three shillings and four pence. Arbutnot on Coins.
 10. A support to saw wood on.
 11. The colours or ensign of a ship. Ainsworth.
 12. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing.
Jack of all trades, shew and found;
 An inverse burle, an exchange under ground. Cleaveland.
 JACK BOOTS. n. s. [from jack, a coat of mail.] Boots which serve as armour to the legs.
 A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a comode and a night-rail. Spectator.
 JACK BY THE HEDGE. n. s. An herb.
Jack by the hedge is an herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other fallads are, and much used in broth. Mortim.
 JACK PUDDING. n. s. [from jack and pudding.] A zani; a merry Andrew.
 Every jack pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover. L'Estrange.
 A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dith they like best: in French jean pottage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.
Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,
 Tosses the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Gay.
 JACK WITH A LANTERN. An ignis fatuus.
 JACKALENT. n. s. [from Jack in Lent, a poor starven fellow.] A simple sheepish fellow.
 You little jackalent, have you been true to us?
 —Ay, I'll be sworn. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 JACKAL. n. s. [from chacal, French.] A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.
 The Belgians tack upon our rear,
 And raking chafe-guns through our sterns they send:
 Close by their firehips, like jackals, appear,
 Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryd. Ann. Mirab.
 The

J A I

The mighty lion, before whom stood the little jackal, the faithful spy of the king of beasts. Arbuth. and Pope's M. Scrib.
JACKANAPES. n. f. [jack and ape.]
 1. Monkey; an ape.
 2. A coxcomb; an impertinent.

Which is he?
 —That jackanapes with scarfs. Shakefp.
 People wondered how such a young upstart jackanapes should grow so pert and faucy, and take so much upon him. Arbuth.
JACKDAW. n. f. [jack and daw.] A cock daw; a bird taught to imitate the human voice.
 To impose on a child to get by heart a long scroll of phrases, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the shape of man. Watts.

JACKET. n. f. [jaquet, French.]
 1. A short coat; a close waistcoat.
 In a blue jacket, with a cross of red. Hubbard's Tale.
 And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;
 And here a tailor's jacket hangs to dry. Swift.
 Jack pudding, in his party-colour'd jacket,
 Tosses the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Gay.

2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.
 She fell upon the jacket of the parson, who stood gaping at her. L'Estrange.
JACON'S LADDER. n. f. The same with Greek valerian.
JACOB'S STAFF. n. f.
 1. A pilgrim's staff.
 2. Staff concealing a dagger.
 3. A cross staff; a kind of astrolabe.

JACOBINE. n. f. A pidgeon with a high tuft. Ainsworth.
JACTITATION. n. f. [jactito, Latin.] Tossing; motion; restlessness; heaving.
 If the patient be surpris'd with jactitation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Harv.
JACULATION. n. f. [jaculatio, jaculor, Latin.] The act of throwing missile weapons.
 So hills amid' the air encounter'd hills,
 Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milt. Parad. Lost.

JADE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from goad, a goad, or spur.]
 1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag.
 Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!
 I am as dull as Winter-starved sheep,
 Tird as a jade in overladen cart. Sidney.
 When they should endure the bloody spur,
 They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades, Sink in the trial. Shakefp. Julius Cæsar.
 The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
 With torches in their hand; and their poor jades
 Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips. Shakefp.

To other regions
 France is a stable, we that dwell in't jades;
 Therefore to th' war. Shakefp. All's well that ends well.
 So have I seen with armed heel
 A wight bestride a commonweal,
 While still the more he kick'd and spur'd,
 The less the fullen jade has stir'd.
 The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with him. L'Estrange.

False steps but help them to renew their race,
 As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.
 2. A forry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.
 Shall these, these old jades, past the flower
 Of youth, that you have, pass you. Chapman's Iliads.
 But she, the cunning 't jade alive,
 Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive,
 By sharing female bounties. Stepney.
 Get in, huffy; now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southerne's Innocent Adultery.
 In diamonds, pearl, and rich brocades,
 She shines the first of batter'd jades,
 And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.
 You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Add.
JADE. n. f. A species of stone.
 The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale blueish grey, or ashy-colour, and a pale green, not simple and uniform, but intermixed. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant and high polish. It is found in the East Indies, and is much used by the Turks for handles of sabres. It is so highly esteemed by the Indians as to be called the divine stone: they wear it externally as a remedy for the gravel, and an amulet to preserve them from the bite of venomous animals. Hill's Materia Medica.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary.
 With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
 The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
 We've jaded out o' th' field. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

J A I

It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon's Essays.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast,
 No favour for the stallion we retain,
 And no respect for the degenerate strain. Dryden's Juven.
 The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.
 There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; or upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts's Logic.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.
 If we live thus tamely,
 To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
 Farewell nobility. Shakefp. Henry VIII.
 3. To employ in vile offices.
 The honourable blood
 Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shakefp. Hen. VI.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.
 I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me; for every reason excites to this. Shakefp. Twelfth Night.
 To JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.
 Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last; they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South's Sermons.

JADISH. adj. [from jade.]
 1. Vicious; bad, as an horse.
 That hors'd us on their backs, to show us
 A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Huallras, p. iii.
 When once the people get the jadish trick
 Of throwing off their kings, no ruler's safe. Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.
 'Tis no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.
 To JAGG. v. a. [jagaw, flits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.
 Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagged on the sides. Bacon's Natural History.

The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the inequality of oak-leaves; but they never have any small plain parts. Bac.
 The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentl.
 An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watt.

JAGG. n. f. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation. The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jagged or scallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Roy.
 Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jagged in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Mort. Husbandry.
JAGGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.
 His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold;
 His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold;
 Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;
 His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Addison.

Amid' those angles, infinitely strain'd,
 They joyful leave their jaggy fangs behind. Thomson's Autumn.
JAGGEDNESS. n. f. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.
 First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain with your coal or lead, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Peacham on Drawing.

JAIL. n. f. [geol, French.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.
 Away with the dotard, to the jail with him. Shakefp.
 A dependant upon him paid six pound ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.
 He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew
 'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.

One jail did all his criminals restrain,
 Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dryden.
JAILER. n. f. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.
JAILER. n. f. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.
 Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunn'd its seeing and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailers. Sidney.

This is as a jailer, to bring forth
 Some monstrous malefactor. Shakefp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
 His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
 There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;
 With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,
 And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryden's En.

Palamon, the prisoner knight,
 Refless for woe, arose before the light;
 And with his jailer's leave, desir'd to breathe
 An air more wholesome than the damp beneath. Dryden.
JAKE.

J A R

JAKES. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.] A house of office.
 I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakefp. King Lear.
 Their fordid avarice rakes
 In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Some have fill'd the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JALAP. n. f. [jalap, French; jalapium, low Latin.]
Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It was not known in Europe till after the discovery of America, and had its name jalapium, or japala, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative in all cases where ferous humours are to be evacuated. Hill's Mat. Med.

JAM. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.
JAMB. n. f. [jambes, French.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.
 No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the fore-side of the chimney jambes. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

JAMBICK. n. f. [jambique, French; iambicus, Latin.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.
 In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
 It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies:
 Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
 In keen jambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

To JANGLE. v. n. [jangler, French. Skinner.] To altercation; to quarrel; to bicker in words.
 Good wits will be jangling; but, gentiles agree,
 This civil war of wits were much better us'd
 On Navarre and his book-men. Shak. Love's Labour Lost.
 So far am I glad it did so fort,
 As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakefp.

There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world matter of contention and jangling. Ruleigh.
 To JANGLE. v. a. To make to sound untuneably.
 Now see that noble and that sovereign reason,
 Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harsh. Shak. Hamlet.
 Ere Gothic forms were known in Greece,
 And in our verse 'ere monkish rhimes
 Had jangled their fantastick chimes. Prior.

JANGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.
JANIZARY. n. f. [A Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.
 His grand vizier, presuming to invest
 The chief imperial city of the West,
 With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;
 The standards lost, and janizaries slain,
 Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

JANNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oat-bread. A northern word.
JANTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, French.] Showy; flattering.
 This sort of woman is a janty flatterer: she hangs on her cloaths, plays her head, and varies her posture. Speclator.

JANUARY. n. f. [Januarius, Latin.] The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.
January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying providence. Peacham.
JAPAN. n. f. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her bruth. Swift.
 To JAPAN. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.
 For not the desk with silver nails,
 Nor bureau of experience,
 Nor standish well japan'd, avails
 To writing of good sense. Swift.

2. To black shoes. A low phrase.
 The god of fire
 Among these generous presents joins his part,
 And aids with foot the new japaning art. Gay's Trivia.
JAPANNER. n. f. [from japan.]
 1. One skilled in japan work.
 2. A shoelackner.

The poor have the same itch;
 They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
 Prefer a new japaner to their shoes. Pope's Horace.
 To JAR. v. n. [from corpe, anglo, Saxon; or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonick, to clamour.]
 1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.
 A hollow groan, a murmuring wind arose;

J A S

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
 Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.
 My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.
 2. To strike or sound untuneably.
 O, you kind gods!
 Cure this great breach in his abused nature:
 Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
 Of this child-changed father. Shakefp. King Lear.

I perceive you delight not in musick.
 —Not a whit, when it jars so. Shakefp.
 A string may jar in the best master's hand,
 And the most skilful archer miss his aim. Roscommon.
 He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
 And every passion aptly harmoniz'd
 Amid' a jarring world. Thomson's Summer.

3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.
 At last, though long, our jarring notes agree. Shakefp.
 For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milt. Parad. Lost.
 Venulus concluded his report:
 A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:
 As when a torrent rolls with rapid force,
 The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
 Roars horrible. Dryden's En.

4. To quarrel; to dispute.
 When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
 Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,
 Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
 Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar. Spenser.
 They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducting to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

JAR. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.
 In r, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Clash; discord; debate.
 He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
 And yet his peace is but continual jar:
 O miserable men, that to him subject are! Fairy Queen.
 Nath'less, my brother, since we parted are Unto this point, we will appeale our jar. Hubbard's Tale.
 Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,
 Between whose endless jar justice preides
 Would lose their names, and so would justice too. Shakefp.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.
 The chattering with dissenters, and dodging about this or other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. [Giarro, Italian.] An earthen vessel.
 About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.
 He med for cooling drink prepares,
 Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.
 Warriors welter on the ground,
 Whilst empty jars the dire defeat refund. Garth.

JARDES. n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches. Farrier's Dict.

JARGON. n. f. [jargon, French; gerisenga, Spanish.] Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.
 Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Bramhall.
 From this last toil again what knowledge flows?
 Just as much, perhaps, as shows
 That all his predecessor's rules
 Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.

During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiastic jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.
JARGONELLE. n. f. See PEAR, of which it is a species.
JASHAWK. n. f. A young hawk. Ainsworth.
JASMINE. n. f. [j-smine, French. It is often pronounced jef- amine.]
 It hath a funnel-shaped flower, consisting of one leaf, which is cut into several segments at the brim, out of whose cup arises the pointal, which afterward becomes the fruit or pod, which, for the most part, grows double and open lengthwise, discovering the seeds, which are oblong, and have a border round them: these are ranged over each other like flates on a house, and are fastened to the placenta. Miller.
 Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;
 From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander. Thomson.

JAW

JASMINE Perfian. n. f. A plant. See LILAC, of which it is a species.

JASPER n. f. [jaspe, Fr. jaspe, Lat.] A hard stone of a bright beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes. It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China. Hill's Mat. Med.
The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue, and spotted with red, yellow and white. Woodward's Met. Ess.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the vatican library. Addison on Italy.

JATROLEPTICK adj. [jatroleptique, Fr. jatroleptique and ἀλκω.] That which cures by anointing.

To JAVEL, or jable v. a. To bemire; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary travelling and travelling. This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties.

JAVEL n. f. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering fellow. When as time, flying with wings swift, Expired had the term that those two javels should render up a reckoning of their travels. Hubb. Tale.

JAVELIN n. f. [javeline, French.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and javelin, stones and sulph'rous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds. Milt. Pa. Lost.
She shakes her myrtle javelin; and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden's Æn.

Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addis. Cato.

JAUUNDICE n. f. [jaundice, Fr. jaune, yellow, Fr.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straighten the motion of the blood so much through that viscous as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastric arteries, which go off from the hepatic, to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice.

What grief hath set the jaundice on your cheeks? Shak.
Those were thy thoughts, and thou couldst judge aright,
'Till int'rest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.

The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tintured with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the real appearances of things. Watson's Improvement of the Mind.

JAUUNDICED adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice. All seems infected, that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundiced eye. Pope.

To JAUNT v. n. [jaunter, French.] To wander here and there; to bustle about. It is now always used in contempt or levity.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass;
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shak. R. II.

JAUNTY n. f. [from the verb.] Ramble; flight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd fore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milt. Par. Reg.

He sends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houses in the night to haunt. Hudibras, p. iii.

They parted, and away posts the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court. L'Estrange.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part have I run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out these metallic and mineral bodies. Woodward.

JAUUNTINESS n. f. [from jaunt, or jaunt, corrupted from gentil, French. See JANTY.] Airy; flight; gentry; gentleness. A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that jauntness of air I was once master of. Addison's Spectator.

JAW n. f. [joue, a cheek, French; whence jawbone, or cheekbone, then jaw.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed. A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor. Prov. xxx. 14.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinal. Walton's Angler.

Piso, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, faith that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immovable. Grew's Museum.

More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden's Æn.

ICO

2. The mouth. My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. Pf. xxii. 15.

My bended hook shall pierce their slimy jaws. Shakspeare.
A sneaky foam works o'er my grinding jaws,
And utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame. Rave.

JAY n. f. [named from his cry. Skinner.] A bird. Two sharp winged theeers, Deck'd with diverse plumes, like painted jays,
Were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways. Fairy Queen.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross wat'ry pumpion—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakspeare.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark,
Because his feathers are more beautiful? Shakspeare.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks. Spectator.

Admires the jay, the insects gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk, when Philomela sings. Pope.

JAZEL n. f. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour. Did.

ICE n. f. [is, Saxon; eis, Dutch.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold. You are no furer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakspeare. R. III.
If I should ask whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted sugar. To break the ice. To make the first opening to any attempt. If you break the ice, and do this feat,
Atchieve the elder, set the younger free
For our access, whose hap shall be to have her,
Will not so graciously be to be ingrate. Shakspeare.

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets. Peacock on Drawing.

After he'd a while look'd wife,
At last broke silence and the ice. Hudibras, p. iii.

To ICE v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice. 2. To cover with concreted sugar.

ICEHOUSE n. f. [ice and house.] A house in which ice is deposited against the warm months.

ICHNEUMON n. f. [ichneumon.] A small animal that breaks the eggs of the crocodile.

ICHNEUMON n. f. A fort of fly. The generation of the ichneumon is in the bodies of caterpillars, and other nymphs of insects. Derham's Physico-Theol.

ICHOGRAPHY n. f. [ichnographia and γραφω.] The groundplot. It will be more intelligible to have a draught of each front in a paper by itself, and also to have a draught of the groundplot or ichnographia by every story in a paper by itself. Moxon.

ICHOR n. f. [ichor.] A thin watery humour like serum. Quincy.

Milk, drawn from some animals that feed only upon flesh, will be more apt to turn rancid and putrify, acquiring first a saline taste, which is a sign of putrefaction, and then it will turn into an ichor. Arbutnot on Aliment.

ICHOROUS adj. [from ichor.] Sanious; thin; undigested. The lung-growth is imputed to a superficial sanious or ichorous exulceration. Harvey on Conjunctions.

The pus from an ulcer of the liver, growing thin and ichorous, corrodes the vessels. Arbutnot on Diet.

ICHTHYOLOGY n. f. [ichthyologie, Fr. ἰχθυολογία, from ἰχθυς and λογία.] The doctrine of the nature of fish. Some there are, as camels and sheep, which carry no name in ichthyology. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ICHTHYOPHAGY n. f. [ichthyophagy and φαγω.] Diet of fish; the practice of eating fish.

ICICLE n. f. [from ice.] A shoot of ice hanging down from the upper part. If distilled vinegar or aqua-fortis be poured into the powder of loadstone, the subliming powder, dried, retains some magnetic virtue; but if the menstruum be evaporated to a consistence, and afterwards doth shoot into icicle, or crystals, the loadstone hath no power upon them. Brown's Vulgar Err.

From locks uncomb'd, and from the frozen beard,
Long icicles depend, and crackling founds are heard. Dryd.

The common dropstone consists principally of spar, and is frequently found in form of an icicle, hanging down from the tops and sides of grotto's. Woodward's Nat. History.

ICINESS n. f. [from ice.] The state of generating ice.

ICON n. f. [εἰκών.] A picture or representation. Boyfardus, in his tract of divination, hath set forth the icons of these ten, yet added two others. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Some of our own nation, and many Netherlanders, whose names and icons are published, have deserved good commendation. Hakewill on Provident.

ICONCLAST

IDE

ICONCLAST n. f. [iconoclaste, French; ἰκονοκλάστης.] A breaker of images.

ICONOLOGY n. f. [iconologie, French; εἰκών and λογία.] The doctrine of picture or representation.

ICTERIC n. f. [ictérique, French; icterus, Latin.]

1. Afflicted with the jaundice. In the jaundice the choler is wanting, and the icteric have a great sourness, and gripes with windiness. Floyer.

2. Good against the jaundice. Idem.

ICY adj. [from ice.]

1. Full of ice; covered with ice; cold; frosty. But my poor heart first set free, Bound in those icy chains by thee. Shakspeare. Meas. for Meas.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as, the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind. Shakspeare.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they met with in Summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle.

Bear Britain's thunder, and her cross display
To the bright regions of the rising day;
Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll,
Where clearer flames glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

2. Cold; free from passion. Thou wouldst have never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect. Shakspeare. Timon.

3. Frigid; backward. If thou do'st find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakspeare's Richard III.

IDEA n. f. [idea, French; ἰδέα.] Mental imagination. Whatsoever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea. Locke.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea. Watson.

Happy you that may to the faint, your only idea,
Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter. Sidney.

Our Saviour himself, being to set down the perfect idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with thee it is in heaven. Hooker, b. i.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thoughts. Fairfax.
I did infer your lineaments,
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobleness of mind. Shakspeare. R. III.

How good, how fair,
Answering his great idea? Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vii.

If Chaucer by the best idea wrought,
The fairest nymph before his eyes he fet. Dryden.

IDEAL adj. [from idea.] Mental; intellectual; not perceived by the senses. There is a two-fold knowledge of material things; one real, when the thing, and the real impression thereof on our senses, is perceived; the other ideal, when the image or idea of a thing, absent in itself, is represented to and considered on the imagination. Chyng's Phil. Prin.

IDEALLY adv. [from ideal.] Intellectually; mentally. A transmutation is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IDENTICAL adj. [identique, French.] The same; implicitly identical. ing the same thing; comprising the same idea. The beard's th' identical beard you knew,
The same numerically true. Hudibras, p. ii.

There majus is identical with magis. Hale's Origin of Man.
Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith. Tillotson's Sermons.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some beings, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, inviolable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God. Bentley's Sermons.

IDENTITY n. f. [identité, French; identitas, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity. There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty. South's Sermon.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity. Locke.

It cuts off the sense at the end of every first line, which produces too frequent an identity in sound, and consequently couplet to the point of an epigram. Prior.

IDES n. f. [ides, Fr. idus, Lat.] A term anciently used among the

IDL

Romans, and still retained in the Romish kalendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six days before the nones, and in the others four days. Trevoux.

A footlayer bids you beware the ides of March. Shakspeare.

IDIOCRASY n. f. [idiocrase, French; ἰδίωσις and κράσις.] Peculiarity of constitution.

IDIOCRITICAL adj. [from idiocrasy.] Peculiar in constitution.

IDIOCY n. f. [idiocia.] Want of understanding. I stand not upon their idicy in thinking that horses did eat their bits. Bacon's Holy War.

IDIOM n. f. [idiome, French; ἰδιωμα.] A mode of speaking peculiar to a language or dialect; the particular cast of a tongue; a phrase; phraseology.

He did romanize our tongue, leaving the words translated as much Latin as he found them; wherein he followed their language, but did not comply with the idiom of ours. Dryden.

Some that with care true eloquence shall teach,
And to just idioms fix our doubtful speech. Prior.

IDIOMATICAL adj. [from idiom.] Peculiar to a tongue; IDIOMATICK adj. phraseological.

Since phrases used in conversation contract meanness by passing through the mouths of the vulgar, a poet should guard himself against idiomatick ways of speaking. Spectator.

IDIOPATHY n. f. [idiopathie, Fr. ἰδίωσις and πάθος.] A primary disease that neither depends on nor proceeds from another. Quint.

IDIOSYNCRASY n. f. [idiosyncrasy, Fr. ἰδίωσις, σύν, and κράσις.] A peculiar temper or disposition not common to another. Quint.

Whether quails, from any idiosyncrasy or peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medicinally use the same. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

The understanding also hath its idiosyncrasies, as well as other faculties. Glanv. Sect. c. 15.

IDIOT n. f. [idiote, Fr. idiota, Latin; ἰδιώτης.] A fool; a natural; a changeling; one without the powers of reason. Life is a tale,
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

What else doth he herein, than by a kind of circumlocution tell his humble suppliants that he holds them idiots, or base wretches, not able to get relief? Raleigh's Essays.

By idle boys and idiots villify'd,
Who me and my calamities deride. Sandys.

Many idiots will believe that they see what they only hear. Dennis.

IDIOTISM n. f. [idiotisme, French; ἰδιωτισμός.]

1. Peculiarity of expression; mode of expression peculiar to a language. Scholars sometimes in common speech, or writings, in their native language, give terminations and idiotisms suitable to their native language unto words newly invented. Hale.

2. Folly; natural imbecility of mind. IDLE adj. [idel, Saxon.]

1. Lazy; averse from labour. For shame, so much to do, and yet idle. Full.

2. Not busy; at leisure. For often have you writ to her; and she in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply. Shak.

3. Unactive; not employed. No war or battle's found
Was heard the world around,
The idle spear and shield were high up hung. Milton.

Children generally hate to be idle; all the care then is, that their busy humour should be constantly employed in something of use to them. Locke.

Supposing, among a multitude embarked in the same vessel, there are several that, in the fury of a tempest, will rather perish than work for their preservation; would it not be madness in the rest to stand idle, and rather chuse to sink than do more than comes to their share? Addison.

4. Useless; vain; ineffectual. They astonish'd, all resistance lost,
All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd. Milton.

And threatening France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
Held idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Where was then
The power that guards the sacred lives of kings?
Why slept the lightning and the thunderbolts,
Or bent their idle rage on fields and trees,
When vengeance call'd 'em here? Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. Worthless; barren; not productive of good. Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he,
That all thine idle offers I refuse;
All that I need I have; what needeth me
To covet more than I have cause to use? Fairy Queen.

Of antres vast, and deserts idle,
It was my hent to speak. Shakspeare's Othello.

The murmuring fudge,
That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. Shakspeare. King Lear.

Id

IDO

He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Dandel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shaksp. King Lear.
6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.
This answer is both idle in regard of us, and also repugnant to themselves. Hooker.
They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs, when the authors of needless innovations are oppos'd with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker, b. iii.
His friend smil'd scornful, and, with proud contempt,
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.
An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.
How ill he wishes to recall the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversions.
Rogers's Sermons.
TO IDLE. v. n. [from the adjective.] To lose time in laziness and inactivity.
Yet free from this poetick madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That she and all her fellow-gods
Sit idling in their high abodes. Prior.
IDLEHEADED. adj. [idle and head.] Foolish; unreasonable.
These idleheaded fickers reforted thither. Carew.
Upon this loss the fell idleheaded, and to this very day stands near the place still. L'Estrange.
IDLENESS. n. f. [from idle.]
1. Laziness; sloth; sluggishness; aversion from labour.
Nor is excess the only thing by which sin mauls and breaks men in their health, and the comfortable enjoyment of themselves thereby; but many are also brought to a very ill and languishing habit of body by mere idleness, and idleness is both itself a great sin, and the cause of many more. South's Sermon.
2. Absence of employment.
All which yet could not make us accuse her, though it made us pine away for sight, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness. Sidney, b. ii.
To the English court assemble now,
From every region, apes of idleness. Shaksp. Henry IV.
He fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill. Dryden's Ovid.
Nature being liberal to all without labour, necessity imposing no industry or travel, idleness bringeth forth no other fruits than vain thoughts and licentious pleasures. Raleigh.
3. Omission of business.
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I know,
My idleness doth hatch. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
4. Unimportance; trivialness.
5. Inefficacy; uselessness.
6. Barrenness; worthlessness.
7. Unreasonableness; want of judgment; foolishness; madness.
There is no heat of affection but is joined with some idleness of brain. Bacon's War with Spain.
IDLER. n. f. [from idle.] A lazy person; a sluggard.
Many of these poor filthier men and idlers, that are commonly presented to his majesty's ships, are so ignorant in sea-service as that they know not the name of a rope. Raleigh.
Thou sluggish idler, dilatory slave. Irene.
IDLY. adv. [from idle.]
1. Lazily; without employment.
I will flay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease. Shaksp. Henry VI.
2. Foolishly; in a trifling manner.
And modern Aegil, whose capricious thought
Is yet with stores of wilder notions fraught,
Too soon convinc'd, shall yield that fleeting breath,
Which play'd so idly with the darts of death. Prior.
3. Carelessly; without attention.
This from rumour's tongue
I idly heard; if true or false, I know not. Shaksp. K. John.
But shall we take the muse abroad,
To drop her idly on the road?
And leave our subject in the middle,
As Butler did his bear and fiddle? Prior.
4. Ineffectually; vainly.
Let this and other allegations, suitable unto it, cease to bark any longer idly against the truth, the course and passage whereof it is not in them to hinder. Hooker.
IDOL. n. f. [idole, French; eidolon; idolum, Latin.]
1. An image worshipped as God.
They did sacrifice upon the idol altar, which was upon the altar of God. 1 Mac. i. 59.
A nation from one faithful man to spring,
Him on this side Euphrates yet residing,
Bred up in idol worship. Milton's Parad. Lost.
The apostle is there arguing against the gnosticks who joined in the idol feasts, and whom he therefore accuses of participating of the idol god. Atterbury.
2. A counterfeit.
Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock. Zech. ii. 17.

JE A

3. An image.
Never did art so well with nature strive,
Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive;
So like the man, so golden to the sight;
So bafe within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.
4. A representation.
Men beholding so great excellence,
And rare perfection in mortality,
Do her adore with sacred reverence,
As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence. Fairy Queen.
5. One loved or honoured to adoration.
He's honoured and lov'd by all;
The soldiers god, and people's idol. Denham's Sophy.
IDOLATER. n. f. [idolatre, French; idolatra, Latin.] One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.
The state of idolaters is two ways miserable: first, in that which they worship they find no succour; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion.
An astrologer may be no Christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism. Bentley's Sermons.
TO IDOLATRIE. v. a. [from idolater.] To worship idols. Ains.
IDOLATROUS. adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry;
compiling idolatry, or the worship of false gods.
Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped. Peachment on Drawing.
IDOLATROUSLY. adv. [from idolatrous.] In an idolatrous manner.
Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred. Hooker.
IDOLATRY. n. f. [idolatrie, Fr. idolatria, Lat.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.
Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd and ador'd;
And, were there sense in his idolatrie,
My substance should be statued in thy stead. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Idolatrie is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way wholly unsuitable to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances.
South's Sermon.
The kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatrie, or the worship of the true God. Addison's Spectator.
IDOLIST. n. f. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.
I to God have brought
Dis honour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idolists and atheists. Milton's Agonist.
TO IDOLIZE. v. a. [from idol.] To love or reverence to adoration.
Those who are generous, humble, just and wise,
Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize. Denham.
Parties, with the greatest violation of Christian unity, denominate themselves, not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first breacher of their idolized opinions. Deacy of Piety.
IDONEOUS. adj. [idoneus, Latin.] Fit; proper; convenient; adequate.
You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body. Boyle.
An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void de jure & facto, and then it ought to be conferred on an idoneous person. Ayliffe.
IDYL. n. f. [eidyllion; idyllium, Latin.] A small short poem.
I. E. for id est, or that is.
That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour. Lacke.
JEALOUS. adj. [jaloux, French.]
1. Suspicious in love.
To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Shaksp. King Lear.
I wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self-bounty, be abus'd: look to't. Shak. Othello.
Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband.
Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too haughty to endure neglected charms. Dryd. Aureng-
2. Emulous; full of competition.
I could not, without extreme reluctance, resign the theme of your beauty to another hand: give me leave to acquaint the world that I am jealous of this subject. Dryden.
3. Zealously

JE J

3. Zealously cautious against dishonour.
I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts. 1 Kings.
4. Suspiciously vigilant.
I am jealous over you with godly jealousy. 2 Cor. ii. 2.
His apprehensions, as his jealous nature had much of tagacity in it, or his restless and mutinous humour, transported him. Clarendon, b. viii.
5. Suspiciously fearful.
Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weigh'd down his virtues. Bacon's Henry VII.
They jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar
Protecting fate supreme. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own repute, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other mens. Dec. of Piety.
6. Suspiciously fearful.
I is doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys our peace. Waller.
While the people are so jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift.
JEALOUSLY. adv. [from jealous.] Suspiciously; emulously;
with suspicious fear, vigilance, or caution.
JEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous; rivalry; suspicion; suspicious vigilance.
Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousness of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me. King Charles.
JEALOUSY. n. f. [jaloux, French, from jealous.]
1. Suspicion in love.
But gnawing jealousy, out of their sight
Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite. Fairy Queen.
The sweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealousy man. Shaksp. Henry IV.
How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair;
And shudd'ring fear, and green-ey'd jealousy!
O love, be moderate; allay thy ecstasy. Shaksp. Henry IV.
Why did you suffer Jachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his noble heart and brain
With needles jealousy? Shaksp. Cymbeline.
Small jealousies, 'tis true, inflame desire;
Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire. Dryden.
2. Suspicious fear.
The obduracy in Essex, in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands, he would take revenge upon him. Clarend.
3. Suspicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.
TO JEER. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.
The merry world did on a day,
With his trainbands and mates, agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in sport to jeer at me. Herbert.
Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomely jests, loud talking, and jeering, which are called indecencies and incivilities. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
TO JEER. v. a. To treat with scoffs.
My children abroad are driven to disavow me, for fear of being jeered. Hawel's England's Tears.
JEER. n. f. [from the verb.] Scoff; taunt; biting jest; flout;
jibe; mock.
Midas, expos'd to all their jeers,
Had lost his art, and kept his ears.
They tip the forehead in a jeer,
As who should say—the wants it here;
She may be handsome, young and rich;
But none will burn her for a witch. Swift.
JEERER. n. f. [from jeer.] A coffer; a scorner; a mocker.
JEERINGLY. adj. [from jeering.] Scornfully; contemptuously; in mock; in scoff.
He jeeringly demandeth, whether the sonorous rays are re-fracted? Derham's Physico-Theology.
JEGET. n. f. A kind of sausage.
JEHOVAH. n. f. [יְהוָה] The proper name of God in the Hebrew language.
JEJUNE. adj. [jejunus, Latin.]
1. Wanting; empty; vacant.
Gold is the only substance which hath nothing in it volatile, and yet melteth without much difficulty: the melting feweth that it is not jejunus, or scarce in spirit. Bacon.
2. Hungry; not saturated.
In gross and turbid streams there might be contained nutriment, and not jejunus or limpid water. Brown's Vulgar Err.
3. Dry; unaffection.
You may look upon an inquiry made up of meer narratives, as somewhat jejunus. Boyle.
JEJUNENESS. n. f. [from jejunus.]
1. Penury; poverty.
There are three causes of fixation: the even spreading both parts, and the jejuneness or extreme comminution of spirits.

JES

Bacon's Natural History.
2. Dryness; want of matter that can engage the attention.
JELLIED. adj. [See GELLY.] Glutinous; brought to a state of viscosity.
The kiss that tips
The jellied philtre of her lips. Cleaveland.
JELLY. n. f. [gelatinum, Latin. See GELLY, which is the proper orthography.]
1. Any thing brought to a state of glutinousness and viscosity.
They, distill'd
Almost to jelly with th' effect of fear,
Stand dumb, and speak not to him. Shaksp. Hamlet.
2. Sweetmeat made by boiling sugar in the jelly.
The desert came on, and jellies brought. King.
That jelly's rich, this malmsey healing;
Pray dip your whiskers. Pope's Sat. of Horace.
JENNETING. n. f. [corrupted from Juneting, an apple ripe in June.] A species of apple soon ripe, and of a pleasant taste. Mortimer's Husbandry.
JENNET. n. f. [See GENNET.] A Spanish horse.
The Spanish hawk presents a jennet,
To shew his love. Prior.
TO JEOPARD. v. a. [See JEOPARDY.] To hazard; to put in danger. Obsolete.
He had been accused of Judaism, and did boldly jeopard his body and life for the religion of the Jews. 2 Mac. xiv. 38.
JEOPARDOUS. adj. [from jeopardy.] Hazardous; dangerous.
JEOPARDY. n. f. [This word is supposed to be derived from j'ai perdu, or jeu perdu. Skinner and Junius.] Hazard; danger; peril. A word not now in use.
And would ye not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you t' accompany.
In this adventure's chancel jeopardy. Hubbard's Tale.
Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn
To ashes ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy. Shaksp. K. John.
This colour will be reprehended or encountered, by im-puting to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Bacon.
TO JERK. v. a. [gezeccan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written jerk.
I lack inquiry
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I thought to've jerk'd him here under the ribs. Shaksp. Othello.
Battings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all a working. Swift.
TO JERK. v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.
Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet;
But, proud of being known, will jerk and greet. Dryden.
JERK. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A smart quick lash.
Contemn the silly taunts of fleeing buffoonry; and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly. Glauco.
Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis; neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden.
2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.
Well run Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a jerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. Ben. Johnson's Underwoods.
Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.
JERKEN. n. f. [cjrtelkm, Saxon.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.
A man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin. Shak.
Mistress Line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line: now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair, and prove a bald jerkin. Shaksp. Tempest.
Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us so fit materials for clothing as the wool of the sheep? Mor's Antidote against Atheism.
Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor frieze jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. South's Sermons.
Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a jerkin. Hudibras, p. ii.
I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Gulliver's Travels.
JERKIN. n. f. A kind of hawk. Alisworth. This should be written gyrkin.
JERSEY. n. f. [from the island of Jersey, where much yarn is spun.] Fine yarn of wool.
JESS. n. f. [geste, French; gesto, Italian.] Short straps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which the is held on the fist. Hanner.

JET

If I prove her haggard,
Though that my jesses were her dear heartstrings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Shakespeare's Othello.
JESSAMINE. n. f. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.
Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullambines;
Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jessamines. Spenser.
JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE. n. f. Sunflower, of which they are a species.
Jerusalem artichokes are increased by small off-sets, and by quartering the roots. Martimer's Husbandry.
To JEST. v. n. [gesticular, Latin.] To divert or make merry by words or actions.
Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced.
Ecclus. viii. 4.

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?
—You may jest on; but I do not like these federal councils. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
JEST. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.
But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake? Shakespeare.
As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon's Essays.
No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy Scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break jests upon them. Tillotson's Sermons.
He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Prior.
2. The object of jests; laughing-stock.
If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me;
then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shak. Mer. IV. of Windsor.
3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not serious; game, not earnest.
That high All-fer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakespeare's R. III.
When his play-fellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew's Cefmol.

JESTER. n. f. [from jest.]
1. One given to merriment and pranks:
The skipping king, he rambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits;
Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
2. One given to farcical.

Now, as a jest, I accost you,
Which never yet one friend has lost you. Swift.
3. Buffoon; jackpudding.
Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.

JET. n. f. [gagat, Saxon; get, Dutch; gagates, Latin.]
1. Jet is a very beautiful fossil, of a firm and very even structure, and of a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay. It is of a fine deep black colour, having a grain resembling that of wood. The ancients recommend jet in medicine; but it is now used only in toys. It is confounded with cannel-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.
Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

The bottom clear,
Now laid with many a jet
Of feed-pearl, ere she bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.
One of us in glass is jet,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.

Under flowing jet,
Of funny ringlets, or of circling brown,
The neck slight shaded. Thompson's Summer.
2. [Jet, French.] A spout or shoot of water.
Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end. Blackmore's Creation.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.
3. A yard. Obsolete.

What orchard unrobbed escapes?
Or pullet dare walk in their jet. Tusser's Husbandry.

To JET. v. n. [jeter, French.]
1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude; to jut out.
Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right? Shakespeare's Tit. And.

JEW

2. To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait.
Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
3. To jolt; to be shaken. [Jetter, French.]
Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. Wilem.
JETSAM. n. f. [jeter, French.] Goods or other things JETSON. n. f. [jéaux, French; jewelen, Dutch.] which, having been cast over board in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral. Bailey.
JETTY. adj. [from jet.]
1. Made of jet.
2. Black as jet.
The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagascar, are of a jetty black. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd. Prior.
Nigrina black, and Merdamente brown,
Vied for his love in jetty bow's below. Pope's Dunciad.

JEWEL. n. f. [jéaux, French; jewelen, Dutch.]
1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.

Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture. Shakespeare.
They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shakespeare.
The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and a portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world: a man putting all his pleasures into one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel. Smith.

2. A precious stone; a gem.
Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stones,
Stol'n by my daughter! Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Proud fame's imperial feat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pope.
3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.

Bid farewell to your sisters.
—Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you. Shakespeare's King Lear.

JEWEL-HOUSE, or Office. n. f. The place where the regal ornaments are deposited.

The king has made him
Master of the jewel-house. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
JEWELLER. n. f. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.

These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller. Boyle.
The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsic worth of a thing to a man of sense is another. L'Estrange.

I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Addison.

JEW-EARS. n. f. [from its resemblance of the human ear.
Skinner.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides are undulated, and in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in ridges like those of the human ear. Its substance is tough like leather, and its colour very dark. It is light when dry, of a disagreeable smell and nauseous taste. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder-trees, especially where they are decaying. It is not much used by physicians; but the common people cure themselves of sore throats with a de-coction of it in milk. Hill's Mat. Med.

An herb called jew-ear groweth upon the lower parts of elder, and sometimes asbes: in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely. Bacon's Natural History.

JEW-MALLOW. n. f. [corchorus, Latin.]

The leaves are produced alternately at the joints of the stalks: the flower has five leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the point of the flower becomes a cylindrical fruit, divided into five cells, filled with angular seeds. Ranunc.
says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Miller.

JEW-STONE. n. f. An extraneous fossil, being the cla-vated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering to each end; generally about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter. It is ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky redness.
It is found in Syria, lodged in a loose sandy stone, or a marly very hard earth. It is diuretick; but has been falsely recommended as a lithontripick. Hill's Mat. Med.

JEW-HARP. n. f. A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring

IGN

spring of iron, which, being struck by the hand, plays against the teeth. Is. conjunction [gr, Saxon.]

1. Suppose that; allowing that. A hypothetical particle.
Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs or ands. Hooker's Preface.

If that rebellion
Came like itself, in base and abject routs;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

If they have done this deed, my noble lord.
—If! talk't thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor. Shakespeare.
This seeing of all things, because we can desire to see all things, he makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This is only an infallibility upon supposition, which amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false.
Tillotson's Sermons, Preface.

All of them suppose the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxim to be good; if so be there were no resurrection. Atterbury's Sermons, Preface.

Tisiphone, that oft hast heard my pray'rs,
Assist, if Oedipus deserve thy care. Pope's Statius.

2. Whether or no.
Uncertain if by augury, or chance;
But by this early rise they all advance. Dryden.

She doubts if two and two make four:
It can't—it may be—and it must;
To which of these must Alma trust?
Nay, further yet they make her go,
In doubting if she doubts or no. Prior.

3. Though I doubt whether; suppose it be granted that.
Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments. Boyle.

IGNEOUS. adj. [igneus, Latin.] Fire; containing fire; emitting fire; having the nature of fire.

That the fire burns by heat, leaves us still ignorant of the immediate way of igneous solutions. Glanv. Scap. c. 20.

IGNIPOTENT. adj. [ignis and potens, Latin.] Prefixed over fire. Pope's Homer.

IGNIS FATUUS. n. f. [Latin.] Will with the wisp; Jack with the lantern.

Vapours arising from putrified waters are usually called ignes fatui. Newton's Opt.

To IGNITE. v. a. [from ignis, fire, Latin.] To kindle; to set on fire.

Take good firm chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it. Grew's Museum.

IGNITION. n. f. [ignition, French, from ignite.] The act of kindling, or of setting on fire.

The laborant stirred the kindled nitre, that the ignition might be perfectly communicated. Boyle.

Those black circular lines we see on dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, are the effects of ignition, by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe. Ray.

IGNITIBLE. adj. [from ignite.] Inflammable; capable of being set on fire.

Such bodies only strike fire which have sulphur or ignitable parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IGNIVOMOUS. adj. [ignivomus, Latin.] Vomiting fire.
Vulcanos and ignivomus mountains are some of the most terrible shocks of the globe. Derham's Physico-Theology.

IGNOBLE. adj. [ignoble, ignobilis, Latin.]
1. Mean of birth; not noble; not of illustrious race.

As when in tumults rise th' ignoble crowd,
Mad are their motions, and their tongues are loud. Dryden.

2. Worthless; not deserving honour. Used of things or persons.
The noble life doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

IGNOBLY. adv. [from ignoble.] Ignominiously; meanly; dishonourably; reproachfully; disgracefully.

To these, that sorer race of men, whose lives
Religious, titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly! Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Here, over-match'd in fight, in heaps they lie;
There scatter'd o'er the fields ignobly fly. Dryden's En.

IGNOMINIOUS. adj. [ignominiosus, French; ignominiosus, Lat.
from ignominia.] Mean; shameful; reproachful; dishonour-able. Used both of persons and things.

They with pale fear surpriz'd,
Fled ignominious. Milton.
Cethegus, though a traitor to the state,
And tortur'd, 'scap'd this ignominious fate. Dryden's Juven.

They gave, and the transferr'd the curs'd advice,
That monarchs should their inward foul disguise;
By ignominious arts, for servile ends,
Should compliment their foes, and shun their friends. Prior.

IGN

Nor has this kingdom deserved to be sacrificed to one single, rapacious, obscure, ignominious projector. Swift.

IGNOMINIOUSLY. adv. [from ignominiosus.] Meanly; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully; reproachfully.

It is some allay to the infamy of him who died ignominiously to be buried privately. South's Sermons.

IGNOMINY. n. f. [ignominia, Fr. ignominia, Latin.] Disgrace; reproach; shame; infamy; meanness; dishonour.

Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heav'n;
Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave. Shakespeare's H. IV.

Strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise
And ignominy; yet to glory aspires,
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame. Milton.

Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after conquest. Addison.

IGNORAMUS. n. f. [Latin.]
1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest im-pannelled in the inquisition of causes criminal and publick; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they dislike their evidence as defective, or too weak to make good the presentment: the effect of which word so written is, that all farther inquiry upon that party, for that fault, is thereby stopped, and he delivered without farther answer. Cowel.

2. A foolish fellow; a vain uninstructed pretender. A low word.
Tell an ignoramus, in place and power, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the world, and he shall readily admit the commendation. South's Sermons.

IGNORANCE. n. f. [ignorance, French; ignoratio, Latin.]
1. Want of knowledge; unskilfulness.

If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same. Hooker, b. v.

Ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakespeare.

Still banish your defenders, 'till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,
As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows! Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If he have power,
Then veil your ignorance; if none, awake
Your dangerous lenity. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If we see right, we see our woes;
Then what avails it to have eyes?
From ignorance our comfort flows,
The only wretched are the wise! Prior.

2. Want of knowledge discovered by external effect. In this sense it has a plural.

Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances. C. Pray.
Punish me not for my sins and ignorances. Tob. iii. 2.

IGNORANT. adj. [ignorant, French; ignorans, Latin.]
1. Wanting knowledge; unlearned; uninstructed; unenlightened.

So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast. Pf. lxxiii. 22.
Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time, and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

In such business
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He that doth not know those things which are of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man, whatever he may know besides. Tillotson's Sermons.

Fools grant whate'er ambition craves,
And men, once ignorant, are slaves. Pope.

2. Unknown; undiscovered.
If you know aught, which does behove my knowledge Thereof to be inform'd, imprison't not In ignorant concealment. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

3. Without knowledge of some particular.
Let not judges be so ignorant of their own right, as to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wise application of laws. Bacon's Essays.

O visions ill foreseen! Better had I
Liv'd ignorant of future! so had borne
My part of evil only. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense.
Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame. Dryden.

5. Ignorantly made or done.
His shipping,
Poor ignorant baubles, on our terrible seas
Like egg-shells mov'd. Shakespeare.

IGNORANTLY. n. f. One untaught, unlettered, uninstructed,
Did I for this take pains to teach
Our zealous ignorant to preach! Denham.

IGNORANTLY. adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge;
unskilfully; without information.

The greatest and most cruel foes we have,
Are those whom you would ignorantly save. Dryden.

When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably,

ILE

mirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are so ignorantly fond as to copy after them. Watts.
TO IGNORE. v. a. [ignorere, French; ignoro, Latin.] Not to know; to be ignorant of. This word Boyle endeavoured to introduce; but it has not been received.
I ignored not the stricter interpretation, given by modern critics to divers texts, by me alleged. Boyle.
 Philosophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they know from those that they ignore. Boyle.
IGNOSCIBLE. adj. [ignoscibilis, Latin.] Capable of pardon. Dist.
JIG. n. f. [giga, Italian; geige, Teutonic, a fiddle.] A light careless dance, or tune.
 When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike music, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former fierceness. Spenser on Ireland.
 As fiddlers still,
 Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you. Donne.
 Posterity shall know that you dare, in these jig given times, to countenance a legitimate poem. Ben. Jonson.
 All the swains that there abide,
 With jigs and rural dance resort. Milton.
 The mutes blushed to see their friends exalting
 Those elegant delights of jig and vaulting. Fenton.
 They wrote to her friends in the country, that she should dance a jig next October in Westminsterhall. Arbutnot.
 Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,
 Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains. Pope.
TO JIG. v. n. [from the noun.] To dance carelessly; to dance. Expressed in contempt.
 As for the jigging part and figures of dances, I count that little. Locke.
JIG-MAKER. n. f. [jig and make.] One who dances or plays merrily.
 Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry?
Shakespeare's Hamlet.
JIGGUMBO. n. f. [A cant word.] A trinket; a knick-knack; a light contrivance in machinery.
 He rifled all his pokes and fobs
 Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs. Hudibras, p. iii.
JILT. n. f. [gilta, Icelandic, to intrap in an amour. Mr. Lye. Perhaps from giglet, by contraction; or gillet, or gillet, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name for a woman. 'Tis also called jillet in Scotland.]
 1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.
 Avoid both courts and camps,
 Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt
 With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
 To throw herself away on fools. Orway's Orphan.
 2. A name of contempt for a woman.
 When love was all an easy monarch's care,
 Jilts rul'd the state, and statemen farces writ. Pope.
TO JILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.
 Tell who loves who;
 And who is jilted for another's sake. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted; bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies. Locke.
 She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt, and sham,
 Had Covent-garden been at Surinam. Congreve.
TO JINGLE. v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the found intended to be expressed.] To clink; to found correspondently.
 What should the wars do with these jingling fools? Shak.
 With noises
 Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
 We were awak'd. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;
 And yet, on humble subjects, great appear. Smith.
 What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
 In founts and jingling syllables grown old! Pope.
JINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
 1. Correspondent sounds.
 Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit. Dryden's Fables, Preface.
 2. Any thing founding; a rattle; a bell.
 If you plant where favages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly. Bacon's Essays.
ILE. n. f. [corrupted from aisle, French.] A walk or alley in a church or public building. Properly aisle.
 Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
 And arches widen, and long ile extend. Pope.
ILE. n. f. [aile, French.] An ear of corn. Ainsworth.
ILEUS. n. f. [Latin.]
 The consequences of inflammation is an ileus, commonly ill designing men.

ILL

called the twisting of the guts; but is really either a circuvolution, or inflection of one part of the gut within the other. Arbutnot on Diet.
ILLEX. n. f. [Latin.]
 The ilex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a fort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chamberlotted, as if it were painted, and is useful for stocks of tools, mallet-heads, chairs, axle-trees, wedges, beetles, pins, and palliades for fortifications, being very hard and durable. Martimer.
ILIAC. adj. [iliacus, Latin.] Relating to the lower bowels.
 The iliac passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.
 Those who die of the iliac passion have their bellies much swelled. Floyer on the Humours.
ILIAC Passion. n. f. A kind of nervous cholick, whose seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above; whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.
ILK. adv. [ealc, Saxon.] Eke; also. It is still retained in Scotland, and denotes each: as, ilk one of you, every one of you. It also signifies the same; as, Macintosh of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same.
 Shepherds, should it not yfend
 Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
 Of Rosalind, who knows not Rosalind,
 That Colin made? ilk can I you rehearse. Spenser.
ILL. adj. [contracted from EVIL, and retaining all its senses.]
 1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL.
 There's some ill planet reigns;
 I must be patient, 'till the heavens look
 With an aspect more favourable. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
 Of his own body he was ill, and gave
 The clergy ill example. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
 Neither is it ill air only that maketh an ill feat; but ill ways, ill markets, and ill neighbours. Bacon's Essays.
 Some, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company to be sad and ill-disposed: others, of a jovial nature, dispose them to be merry.
 2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense.
 You with me health in very happy season;
 For I am on the fudden something ill. Shaksp. Henry IV.
 I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governors falling ill in the time of the sieges. Temple.
ILL. n. f.
 1. Wickedness.
 Ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance. Bacon.
 Young men to imitate all ills are prone;
 But are compell'd to avarice alone:
 For then in virtue's shape they follow vice. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
 Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden's Aureng.
 2. Misfortune; misery.
 Who can all sense of others ills escape,
 Is but a brute at best in human shape. Tate's Juvenal.
 Though plung'd in ills and exercis'd in care,
 Yet never let the noble mind despair;
 When prest by dangers, and beset with foes,
 The gods their timely succour interpose;
 And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,
 By unforeseen expedients bring relief. A. Phillips.
ILL. adv.
 1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.
 Ill at ease, both the and all her train
 The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain. Dryden.
 2. Not easily.
 Thou desir'st
 The punishment all on thyself! alas!
 Bear thine own first; ill able to sustain
 His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part,
 And my displeasure bear'st so ill. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate,
 When just approaching to the nuptial state. Dryden.
ILL. substantive or adverb, is used in composition to express any bad quality or condition, which may be easily understood by the following examples.
ILL. substantive.
 Dangerous conjectures in ill breeding minds. Shak. Hamlet.
 I have an ill divining soul:
 Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
 As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakespeare.
 No look, no last adieu before he went!
 In an ill boding hour to slaughter sent. Dryd. Æn.
 I know
 The voice ill boding, and the solemn sound. Phillips.
 He may strew
 The wisest prince on earth may be deceived by the craft of ill designing men. Swift's Examiner.
 Your

ILL

Your ill meaning politician lords,
 Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
 Appointed to await me thirty spies,
 Who, threat'ning cruel death, constrain'd the bride
 To wring from me and tell to them my secret. Milt. Agon.
 A spy distinguish'd from his airy stand,
 To bribe whose vigilance, Ægisthus told
 A mighty sum of ill persuading gold. Pope's Odyssey.
ILL. adverb.
 There founded an ill according cry of the enemies, and a lamentable noise was carried abroad. Wisd. xviii. 10.
 My colleague,
 Being so ill affected with the gout,
 Will not be able to be there in person. Ben. Jonson. Catil.
 The danger of the day's but newly gone,
 And the examples
 Of every minute's instance, present now,
 Have put us in these ill becoming arms. Shaksp. H. IV.
 Lead back thy Saxons to their ancient Elbe:
 I would restore the fruitful Kent, the gift
 Of Vortigern, or Hengist's ill bought aid. Dryd. K. Arthur.
 We simple toasters take delight
 To see our women's teeth look white;
 And every faucy ill bred fellow
 Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow. Prior.
 The ungrateful treason of her ill chosen husband overthrows her. Sidney, b. ii.
 Envy, how carefully does it look? How meagre and ill complexioned? It preys upon itself, and exhausts the spirits. Collier on Envy.
 There grows,
 In my most ill compos'd affection, such
 A stanchless avarice, that, were I king,
 I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shaksp. Macb.
 To what end this ill concerted lye,
 Palpable and gross? Dryden's Don Sebastian.
 Our generals at present are such as are likely to make the best use of their numbers, without throwing them away on any ill concerted projects. Addison on the War.
 The second daughter was a peevish, froward, ill conditioned creature as ever was. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
 No Persian arras hides his homely walls
 With antick vests, which, through their shady fold, Betray the freaks of ill dissembled gold. Dryd. Virg. Georg.
 You shall not find me, daughter,
 After the slander of most step-mothers,
 Ill eyed unto you. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 I see thy sister's tears,
 Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death,
 In the pursuit of our ill fated loves.
 Others ill fated are condemn'd to toil
 Their tedious life. Prior.
 Plain and rough nature, left to itself, is much better than an artificial ungratefulness, and such studied ways of being ill fashioned. Locke.
 Much better, when I find virtue in a fair lodging, than when I am bound to seek it in an ill favoured creature, like a pearl in a dunghill. Sidney.
 Near to an old ill favoured castle they meant to perform their unknighly errand. Sidney, b. ii.
 O, what a world of vile ill favour'd faults
 Look handsome in three hundred pounds a year! Shaksp.
 If a man had but an ill favoured nose, the deep thinkers would contrive to impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.
 I was at her house the hour she appointed.
 —And you sped, sir?
 —Very ill favouredly. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 He shook him ill favouredly for the time, raging through the very bowels of his country, and plundering all whersoever he came. Havel's Vocal Forest.
 They would not make bold, as every where they do, to destroy ill formed and mis-shaped productions. Locke.
 The fabled dragon never guarded more
 The golden fleece, than he his ill got store. Dryd. Juvenal.
 Bid him employ his care for these my friends,
 And make good use of his ill gotten power,
 By sheltering men much better than himself. Addis. Cato.
 Ill govern'd passions in a prince's breast,
 Hazard his private and the publick rest.
 That knowledge of theirs is very superficial and ill grounded. Waller.
 Ill grounded passions quickly wear away;
 What's built upon esteem can ne'er decay. Walsb.
 Hither, of ill join'd sons and daughters born,
 First from the ancient world these giants came. Milton.
 Nor has he erred above once by an ill judged superfluity.
 Did you never taste delicious drink out of an ill looked vessel? Garth's Ovid.
 L'Estrange.

ILL

The match had been so ill made for Plexirtus, that his ill led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come fifty to his defence. Sidney, b. ii.
 The works are weak, the garison but thin,
 Dispirited with frequent overthrows,
 Already wavering on their ill mann'd walls. Dryden.
 He will not hear me out!
 Was ever criminal forbid to plead?
 Curb their ill manner'd zeal. Dryden.
 These are the product
 Of those ill mated marriages thou saw'st,
 Where good with bad were match'd. Milt. Parad. Lost.
 It is impossible for the most ill minded, avaritious, or cunning clergyman to do the least injustice to the meanest cottager, in any bargain for tythes. Swift.
 Soon as th' ill omen'd rumour reach'd his ear,
 Who can describe th' amazement in his face! Dryden.
 The eternal law of things must not be altered, to comply with his ill ordered choice. Locke.
 When you expose the scene,
 Down the ill organ'd engines fall,
 Off fly the vizards. Swift.
 For Phthia fix'd is my return;
 Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,
 Than from an equal here sustain the publick scorn. Dryden.
 There motly images her fancy strike,
 Figures ill pair'd, and families unlike. Pope's Dunciad.
 Sparta has not to boast of such a woman;
 Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love. Dryden.
 I shall direct you better, a task for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had more opportunities than many others to observe what sources the follies of women are derived from. Swift.
 Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished potion. Locke.
 Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
 Her thoughts inventive on the bridal day;
 The conscious fire the dawning blush survey'd,
 And smiling thus bespoke the blooming maid. Pope's Odyssey.
 Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain:
 As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
 So many years is she condemn'd by fate. Dryden.
 The god inform'd
 This ill shap'd body with a daring foul. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
 There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill sort'd: whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women; but little of solid meat for men. Dryden.
 It does not belong to the priest's office to impose this name in baptism: he may refuse to pronounce the same, if the parents give them ludicrous, filthy, or ill founding names. Ayliffe.
 Ill spirited Worcester, did we not send grace,
 Pardon and terms of love to all of you? Shaksp. H. IV.
 From thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove An useless sorrow, and an ill star'd love. Prior.
 Ah, why th' ill suiting pastime must I try?
 To gloomy care my thoughts alone are free:
 Ill the gay sports with troubled hearts agree. Pope's Odyssey.
 Holding of ill tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Greav's Cosmol. b. ii.
 The maid, with downcast eyes, and mute with grief,
 For death unfinish'd, and ill tim'd relief,
 Stood fullen to her suit. Dryden's Ovid.
 How should opinions, thus settled, be given up, if there be any suspicion of interest or design, as there never fails to be, where men find themselves ill treated? Locke.
 That boldness and spirit which lads get amongst their play-fellows at school, has ordinarily a mixture of rudeness and ill turned confidence; so that these misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned. Locke.
ILLACHRYMABLE. adj. [illachrymabilis, Latin.] Incapable of weeping. Dist.
ILLAPSE. n. f. [ilapsum, Latin.]
 1. Gradual immision or entrance of one thing into another.
 As a piece of iron red hot, by reason of the illapse of the fire into it, appears all over like fire; so the souls of the blessed, by the illapse of the divine essence into them, shall be all over divine. Norris.
 2. Sudden attack; casual coming.
 Life is oft preserved
 By the bold swimmer in the swift illapse
 Of accident disastrous. Thomson's Summer.

ILLITERATE. adj. [illiteratus, Latin.] Unlettered; untaught; unlearned; unenlightened by science.
 The duke was illiterate, yet had learned at court to supply his own defects, by the drawing unto him of the best instruments of experience. Watson.
 Th' illiterate writer, empirick like, applies
 To minds diseas'd unsafe chance remedies:
 The learn'd in schools, where knowledge first began,
 Studies with care th' anatomy of man;
 Sees virtue, vice, and passions in their cause,
 And fame from science, not from fortune draws. Dryden.
 In the first ages of Christianity not only the learned and the wise, but the ignorant and illiterate embraced torments and death. Tillotson's Sermons.
ILLITERATENESS. n. f. [from illiterate.] Want of learning; ignorance of science.
 Many acquainted with chymistry but by report, have, from the illiterateness and impostures of those that pretend skill in it, entertained an ill opinion of the art. Boyle.
ILLITERATURE. n. f. [in and literature.] Want of learning.
 The more usual causes of this deprivation are want of holy orders, illiterature, or inability for the discharge of that sacred function, and irreligion. Ayliffe's Paragon.
ILLNESS. n. f. [from ill.]
 1. Badness or inconvenience of any kind, natural or moral.
 He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison-doors set open, is perfectly at liberty, though his preference be determined to stay, by the illness of the weather. Locke.
 2. Sickness; malady; disorder of health.
 On the Lord's day, which immediately preceded this illness, he had received the sacrament. Atterbury's Sermons.
 Since the account her majesty received of the insolent behaviour of the faction, during her late illness at Windsor, she hath been willing to see them deprived of all power to do mischief. Swift.
 3. Wickedness.
 Thou would be great;
 Art not without ambition; but without
 The illness should attend it. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
ILLNATURE. n. f. [ill and nature.] Habitual malevolence; want of humanity.
Illnature inclines a man to those actions that thwart and four and disturb conversation, and consists of a proneness to do ill turns, attended with a secret joy upon the sight of any mischief that befalls another, and of an utter insensibility of any kindness done him. South's Sermons.
ILLNATURED. adj. [from illnature.]
 1. Habitually malevolent; wanting kindness or goodwill; mischievous.
 These ill qualities denominate a person illnatured, they being such as make him grievous and uneasy to all whom he deals and associates himself with. South's Sermons.
 Stay, silly bird, th' illnatured task refuse;
 Nor be the bearer of unwelcome news. Addison's Occid.
 It might be one of those illnatured beings who are at enmity with mankind, and do therefore take pleasure in filling them with countless terrors. Atterbury's Sermons.

There wanted not some about him that would have persuaded him that all was but an illusio. Bacon's Henry VII.
 So oft they fell
 Into the same illusio; not as man, Whom they triumph'd, once laps'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
 An excuse for uncharitableness, drawn from pretended inability, is of all others the most general and prevailing illusio. Atterbury's Sermons.
 Many are the *illusio*s by which the enemy endeavours to cheat men into security, and defeat their title to salvation. Rogers's Sermons.
 To dream once more I close my willing eyes;
 Ye soft *illusio*s, dear deceits, arise! Pope.
 We must use some illusio to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries. Pope.
ILLUSIVE. adj. [from illusio, Latin.] Deceiving by false show.
 The heathen bards, who idle fables dress,
Illusive dreams in mystick forms express. Blackmore.
 While the fond soul,
 Wrapt in gay visions of unreal bliss,
 Still paints th' illusive form. Thomson's Spring.
ILLUSORY. adj. [from in and lusorius, Latin; illusoire, Fr.] Deceiving; fraudulent.
 Subtly, in those who make profession to teach or defend truth, hath passed for a virtue: a virtue indeed, which, consisting for the most part in nothing but the fallacious and illusory use of obscure or deceitful terms, is only fit to make men more conceited in their ignorance. Locke.
ILLUSTRATE. v. n. [illustrare, Latin; illustrer, Fr.]
 1. To brighten with light.
 2. To brighten with honour.
 Matter to me of glory! whom their hate
Illustrates, when they see all regal pow'r
 Giv'n me to quell their pride.
 Thee he enroll'd her garter'd knights among,
Illustrating the noble list. Phillips.
 3. To explain; to clear; to elucidate.
 They take up popular conceits, and from tradition unjustifiable, or really false, illustrate matters of undeniable truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But now two mirrors of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death. Shaksp. R. III.
The image of the jest
I'll shew you here at large. Shaksp. Mer. Wives of Windsor.
He made us to his image all agree;
That image is the soul, and that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.
Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches,
The images of revolt. Shaksp. King Lear.
This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye. Shaksp. King John.
The face of things a frightful image bears,
And present death in various forms appears. Dryden's Æn.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.
Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.
When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles. Watts.

To IMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy; to imagine.
How are immaterial substances to be imaged, which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.
Image to thy mind
How our forefathers to the Stygian shades Went quick. Phillips.
His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior.
If fate some future bard shall join
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

IMAGERY. n. f. [from image]
1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.
Of marble stone was cut
An altar, carv'd with cunning imagery. Fairy Queen.
When in those oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraits, and imagery;
Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd
The godhead's pow'r. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Your gift shall two large goblets be
Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,
And high emboss'd. Dryden's Æn.

2. Show; appearance.
What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secluded from the world, and all its cares,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear? Prior.
All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attract our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.
Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastick imagery. Taylor.

3. Copies of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.
It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholick fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality. Atterbury's Sermons.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.
I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery. Dryden.

IMAGINABLE. adj. [imaginable, Fr. from imagine.] Possible to be conceived.
It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem. South's Sermons.
Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillotson's Sermons.

IMAGINANT. adj. [imaginant, French.] Imagining; forming ideas.
We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMAGINARY. adj. [imaginaire, French, from imagine.]
1. Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.
False sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shaksp.
Expectation whirls me round:
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh's History of the World.
Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer, Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison's Cato.

IMAGINATION. n. f. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French, from imagine.]
1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

I M B

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.
Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Glanv. Sciss.
O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The fight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton's Agonistes.
His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.
Conception; image in the mind; idea.
Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginations; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sid.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shaksp. R. III.
Better I were distracted,
So should my thoughts be fever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shaksp. King Lear.
We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself leads us. Locke.

3. Contrivance; scheme.
Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. Lam. iii. 60.

IMAGINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, Fr. from imagine.] Fantastick; full of imagination.
Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon's Natural History.
Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To IMAGINE. v. a. [imaginer, French; imaginor, Latin.]
1. To fancy; to paint in the mind.
Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shaksp. Present Feast.
Are less than horrible imaginings. Shaksp. Macbeth.
What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition?
2. To scheme; to contrive.
They intended evil against thee, they imagined a malicious device. Pf. xxi. 11.

IMAGINER. n. f. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.
The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up; and still he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the actor think. Bacon's Natural History.

IMBECILE. adj. [imbecilis, Latin; imbecille, French.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.
To IMBECILE. v. a. [from the adjective.] This word is corruptly written embezzle. To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations.
Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbeciled. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

IMBECILITY. n. f. [imbecillité, French.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.
A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection.
No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker, b. iv.
We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.
That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worse in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked. Hooker.
Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son would strike his father dead. Shaksp. Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them.
When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBIBE. v. a. [imbibe, Latin; imbiber, French.]
1. To drink in; to draw in.
A pot of adies will receive more hot water than cold, forasmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Brown.
The torrent merciless imbibes
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes. Swift.

I M B

Illumin'd wide,
The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the fun. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To admit into the mind.
Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises. Hammond.
It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Locke.
Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. To drench; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in the English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.
Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton.

IMBIBER. n. f. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.
Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous steams. Arbutnot.

IMBIBITION. n. f. [imbibition, French, from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.
Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.
Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon's Natural History.
A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBITTER. v. a. [from bitter.]
1. To make bitter.
2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.
Let them extinguish their passions which imbitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison's Freeholder.
Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame? South's Sermons.

3. To exasperate.
To IMBOLDEN. v. a. [from body.]
1. To condense to a body.
2. To invest with matter.
An opening cloud reveals
An heavenly form imbod'd, and array'd
With robes of light. Dryden.
Though affidity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialised spirits, yet it is more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanv. Sciss.

3. To bring together into one mass or company.
I by vow am so embodied yours,
That she which marries you must marry me. Shaksp. Never since created, man Met such imbodied force, as nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry
Ward'd on by cranes. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.
Under their head imbod'd all in one. Milt. Par. Lost.
Then Clausus came, who led a num'rous band
Of troops embodied, from the Sabine land. Dryden's Æn.

4. To inclose. Improper.
In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbedded in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marble. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBOD. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.
The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, 'till the quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.
The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbod and run into one. Locke.

To IMBOLL. v. n. [from boil.] To exultate; to exultate; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron.
With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imboling in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen.

To IMBOLDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage.
'Tis necessary he should die:
Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy. Shak. Timon.
I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something imboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
I was the more imboldened, because I found I had a soul congenial to his. Dryden.
Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;
Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay. Dryden's Æn.
Their virtues and superior genius imboldened them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Swift.

To IMBOSOM. v. a. [from bosom.]
1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.
The Father infinite,
By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the son. Milton's Par. Lost.
Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,
And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd. Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.
But glad desire, his late imbosom'd guest,
Yet but a babe, with milk of fight he nurst. Sidney.
Who glad t' imbosom his affection vile,
Did all the might, more plainly to appear. Fairy Queen.

To IMBOW. v. a. [from bow.] To inclose; to shut in.
That sweet breath,
Which was embow'd in this beauteous clay. Shak. K. John.

To IMBOW. v. a. [from bow.] To arch; to vault.
Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond fure, Imbowed with gold and gorgeous ornament. Fairy Queen.
Imbowed windows be pretty retiring places for conference: they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.
Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pale,
And love the high embow'd roof,
With antick pillar massy proof. Milton.

IMBOWMENT. n. f. [from imbrow.] Arch; vault.
The roof all open, not so much as any embowment near any of the walls left. Bacon's Natural History.

To IMBOWER. v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.
And flooping thence to Ham's embowering walks,
In spotless peace retir'd. Thomson.

To IMBRA. v. a. To intangle. A low word.
With subtle cobweb cheats
They're catch'd in knotted law, like nets;
In which, when once they are imbrangled,
The more they stir, the more they're tangled. Hudibras.

IMBRICATED. adj. [from imbrax, Latin.] Indented with concavities; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMBRICATION. n. f. [imbrax, Latin.] Concave indenture.
All is guarded with a well made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Darham.

To IMBROWN. v. a. [from brown.] To make brown; to darken; to obscure; to cloud.
Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade
Imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The walking crew,
At thy request, support the miry shoe;
The foot grows black that was with dirt imbrown'd,
And in thy pocket ginsling half-pence found. Gay.
Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.
Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands. Pope.

To IMBRUE. v. a. [from in and brue.]
1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long.
Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embru'd,
And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd. Spenser.
There streams a spring of blood so fast
From those deep wounds, as all embru'd the face
Of that accursed catiff. Daniel's Civil War.
The merciless Turks, embru'd with the Christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knolles's History of the Turks.
At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbrue. Sandys.
Lucius pities the offenders,
That would embrue their hands in Cato's blood. Addison.
Lo! these hands in murder are imbrued,
Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.
These, where two ways in equal parts divide,
The direful monster from afar decry'd;
Two bleeding babes depending at her side;
Whose panting vitals, warm with life, she draws,
And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws. Pope.
His virgin sword Ægylthus' veins imbrued;
The murderer fell, and blood atton'd for blood. Pope.
A good man chafes rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbrue his hands in blood. Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.
Some bathed kisses, and did oft embrue
The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips. Fairy Queen.

To IMBRUTE. v. a. [from brute.] To degrade to brutality.
I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast; and mix with bestial slime,
This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton's Par. Lost.
The foul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, 'till the quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

To IMBU'E. v. a. [imbuo, Latin.] This word, which seems wanted in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest. Imbu, French, the participial adj. is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe with any liquor or die.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning; among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles. Digby.

Cloaths which have once been thoroughly embued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colour. Boyle.

Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbued and tinctured with the colour, Woodw.
To IMBU'RSE. v. a. [bourse, French.] To stock with money. This should be emburse, from embourser, French.

IMITABILITY. n. f. [imitabilis, Latin.] The quality of being imitable.

According to the multifariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

IMITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Latin; imitable, French.]

1. Worthy to be imitated.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course? Raleigh's History of the World.

As acts of parliament are not regarded by most imitable writers, I account the relation of them improper for history. Hayw.

2. Possible to be imitated.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers. Atterbury.

To IMITATE. v. a. [imito, Latin; imiter, French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of your muskets. Bacon.

Despise wealth, and imitate a god. Crowley.

And imitate his language and his coat. Man of Taste.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield,
And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryden's A.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what, imitate an ode! Gay.

IMITATION. n. f. [imitatio, Latin; imitation, French.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

2. That which is offered as a copy.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestic for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division on the groundwork. Dryden.

IMITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Latin.] Inclined to copy.

This temple, less in form, with equal grace,
Was imitative of the first in Thrace. Dryden.

IMITATOR. n. f. [imitator, Latin; imitateur, French.] One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle, says the poet. Dry.

IMMACULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Latin; immaculé, Fr.]

1. Spotless; pure; undefiled.

To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ. Hooker.

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shakespeare.

The king, whom catholics count a faint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure
From other guilts as that, heav'n did not hold
One more immaculate. Denham's Sophy.

2. Pure; limpid. Improper.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,
Hath had his current and defil'd himself. Shakesp. Rich. II.

To IMMACULATE. v. a. [from manacle.] To fetter; to confine.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immacul'd. Milton.

IMMANE. adj. [immanis, Latin.] Vast; prodigiously great.

IMMANENT. adj. [immanens, French; in and manens, Latin.]

Intrinsic; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves, we ascribe intellects, volitions, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glauco. Scip.

What he wills and intends once, he willed and intended from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South.

I M M

IMMANIFEST. adj. [in and manifest.] Not manifest; not plain.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMMANITY. n. f. [immanitas, Latin.] Barbarity; savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith. Shakesp. H. VI.

IMMARCESIBLE. adj. [in and marcesco, Latin.] Unfading.

IMMARTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My pow'rs are unfit, Myself immartial. Chapman's Odyssey.

To IMMASK. v. a. [in and masco.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nose, to immask our noted outward garments. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

IMMATERIAL. adj. [immaterialis, Fr. in and materia, Latin.]

1. Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual, the glorious inhabitants of those sacred places, where there is nothing but light and immortality; no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon; but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever, do dwell. Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,
Besides the body, in which she is confin'd;
So hath she not a body of her own. Davies.

But is a spirit, and immaterial mind.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decey of Piety.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillotson's Sermons.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATERIALITY. n. f. [from immaterial.] Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATERIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.] In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporal rays, do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMMATERIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Latin.] Distinct from matter; incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterIALIZED spirits, yet is it more than our imbedded souls can bear without lassitude. Glauco. Scip.

IMMATERIALNESS. n. f. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATERIATE. adj. [in and materia, Latin.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; without body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immaterial, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

After a long enquiry of things immaterial in matter, I incorporate some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as this of sounds. Bacon.

IMMATURE. adj. [immaturus, Latin.]

1. Not ripe.

2. Not perfect; not arrived at fulness or completion.

The land enterprise of Panama was an ill measured immature counsel; for it was grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them. Bacon.

This is your time for faction and debate,
For partial favour, and permitted hate:
Let now your immature dissension cease,
Sit quiet. Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature, if a man lives till seventy. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

IMMECHANICAL. adj. [in and mechanical.] Not according to the laws of mechanics.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature. Chyney.

IMMECHIACY. n. f. [immediate, French, from immediate.]

Personal greatness; power of acting without dependence. This is a harsh word, and sense peculiar I believe to Shakespeare.

He led our pow'rs,
Bore the commission of my place and person;
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And call itself your brother. Shakesp. King Lear.

IMMEDIATE. adj. [immediat, French; in and medius, Latin.]

1. Being in such a state with respect to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens. Burnet.

2. Not acting by second causes.

It is much to be ascribed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleasure. Abbot.

3. Instant; present with regard to time. Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief
Must not be toft and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Shakespeare. Timon.

Death denounc'd that day,
Which he presumes already vain, and void,
Because not yet inflict'd, as he fear'd,
By some immediate stroke. Milton's Paradise Lost.

But she, how'er of vict'ry sure,
Contents the wreath too long delay'd;
And arm'd with more immediate pow'r,
Calls cruel silence to her aid. Prior.

IMMEDIATELY. adv. [from immediate.]

1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop, is that which vests the whole property of a thing in God. South's Sermons.

2. Instantly; at the time present; without delay.

Her father hath commanded her to slip

With wanton Paris sleeps. Shakespeare.

IMMUSICAL.

I M P

IMMUSICAL. adj. [in and musical.] Unmusical; in harmonious.
All sounds are either musical, which are ever equal, or im-musical, which are ever unequal, as the voice in speaking, and whisperings. Bacon's Natural History.
When we consider the immusical note of all swans we ever beheld or heard of, we cannot consent. Brown.
IMMUTABILITY. n. f. [from immutabilitas, Lat. immutabilitas, Fr.
from immutabile.] Exemption from change; invariableness;
unchangeableness.
The immutability of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner. Hooker.
His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immutability of God.
Cheyne's Phil. Princ.
IMMUTABLE. adj. [from immutabilis, Latin.] Unchangeable;
invariable; unalterable.
By two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lie, we have a strong consolation. Heb. vi.
Thy threatenings, Lord, as thine, thou may'st revoke;
But if immutable and fix'd they stand,
Continue still thyself to give the stroke,
And let not foreign foes oppress thy land. Dryden.
IMMUTABLY. adv. [from immutabile.] Unalterably; invariably; unchangeably.
His love is like his essence, immutable eternal. Boyle.

IMPAIRMENT. n. f. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.
His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
IMPALEABLE. adj. [from impalpable, Fr. in and palpable.] Not to be perceived by touch.
If beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the fineness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Boyle.
TO IMPARADISE. v. a. [from imparadise, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.
This imparadis'd neighbourhood made Zelmane's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did over-cloud it. Sidney, b. iii.
All my souls be
Imparadis'd in you, in whom alone
I understand, and grow, and see. Dennis.
Thus these two,
Imparadis'd in one another's arms,
The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss. Milton's Paradise Lost.
IMPARITY. n. f. [from imparitas, impar, Latin.]
1. Inequality; disproportion.
Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the jejuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Bacon.
2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.
What verity is there in that numerical conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd; and so by parity or imparity of letters in mens names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown's Vulgar Errors.
TO IMPARK. v. a. [in and park.] To inclose with a park;
to sever from a common.
TO IMPART. v. a. [from impartior, Latin.]

High state and honours to others impart,
But give me your heart. Dryden.
2. To communicate.
Gentle lady,
When first I did impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.
As in confession the revealing is for the ease of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their minds. Bacon.
Thou to me thy thoughts
Wast wont, I mine to thee was wont impart. Mit. P. L.
I find thee knowing of thyself;
Expressing well the spirit within thee free,
My image, not imparted to the brute. Mit. Par. Left.
IMPARTIAL. adj. [from impartialis, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons.
Success I hope, and fate I cannot fear:
Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;
Jove is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden's En.
IMPARTIALITY. n. f. [from impartialitas, French; from impartial.] Equitableness; justice.
A pious and well disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside
it. Saunders's Sermons.
IMPARTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiased judgment; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.
Since the Scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. Saunders's Sermons.
IMPARTIBLE. adj. [from impartibilis, Fr. from impart.] Communicable; to be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant,

The middle action, which produceth imperfect bodies, is fitly called, by some of the ancients, iniquation or incohesion, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

The ancients were imperfect in the doctrine of meteors, by their ignorance of gunpowder and fireworks. Brown.

There are divers things we agree to be knowledge by the bare light of nature, which yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood by our imperfect intellects, that let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will yet appear obscure. Boyle.

A marcor is either imperfect, tending to a greater withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an intire wasting of the body, excluding all cure. Harvey on Consumptions.

The still-born sounds upon the palate hung, And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryden.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men. Locke.

2. Frail; not completely good.

IMPERFECTION. n. f. [imperfectio, Fr. from imperfect.] Defect; failure; fault, whether physical or moral; whether of persons or things.

Laws, as all other things human, are many times full of imperfection; and that which is supposed behoveful unto men, proveth oftentimes most pernicious. Hooker.

The duke had taken to wife Anne Stanhope, a woman for many imperfections intolerable; but for pride monstrous. Haywo.

Imperfections would not be half so much taken notice of, if vanity did not make proclamation of them. L'Estrange.

The world is more apt to censure than applaud, and himself fuller of imperfections than virtues. Addison's Spectator.

These are rather to be imputed to the simplicity of the age than to any imperfection in that divine poet. Addison.

IMPERFECTLY. adv. [from imperfect.] Not completely; not fully; not without failure.

Should sinking nations summon you away, Maria's love might justify your stay; Imperfectly the many vows are paid, Which for your safety to the gods were made. Stepney.

Those would hardly understand language or reason to any tolerable degree; but only a little and imperfectly about things familiar. Locke.

with more ways to convey into the understanding the notice of corporeal things than five. Locke.
I my thoughts deceive
With hope of things impossible to find. Watts.
IMPOSSIBILITY. n. f. [impossibilitas, Fr. from impossible.]
1. Impracticability; the state of being not feasible.
Simple Philoclea, it is the impossibility that doth torment me; for unlawful desires are punished after the effect of enjoying, but impossible desires in the desire itself. Sidney.
Admit all these impossibilities and great absurdities to be possible and convenient. Whitgift.
Let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fry sun,
Murdering impossibility, to make
What cannot be, flight work. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.
They confound difficulty with impossibility. South.
Those who assert the impossibility of space existing without matter, must make body infinite. Locke.
When we see a man of like passions and weakness with ourselves going before us in the paths of duty, it confutes all lazy pretences of impossibility. Rogers.
2. That which cannot be done.
Though men do, without offence, wish daily that the affairs, which with evil success are past, might have fallen out much better; yet to pray that they may have been any other than they are, this being a manifest impossibility in itself, the rules of religion do not permit. Hooker.
Impossibilities! oh no, there's none,
Could I bring thy heart captive home. Cowley.
IMPOST. n. f. [impost, impost, French; impositum, Latin.] A tax; a toll; custom paid.
Taxes and imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loses in the three. Bacon's Essays.
IMPOSTS. n. f. [impost, Fr. incumb, Latin.] In architecture, that part of a pillar, in vaults and arches, on which the weight grand impostor, the devil, over the deluded sons of men. South.

IMPOSTURE. n. f. [imposture, Fr. impostura, Latin.] Cheat; fraud; suppositiousness; cheat committed by giving to persons or things a false character.
That the soul and angels have nothing to do with grosser locality is generally opinioned; but who is it that retains not a great part of the imposture, by allowing them a definitive ubi, which is still but imagination? Glauco, Scip.
Open to them so many of the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Evelyn.
We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with that title. South.
Form new legends,
And fill the world with follies and impostures. Irene.
IMPTENCE. n. f. [imptentia, Latin.]
IMPTENCY. n. f. [imptentia, Latin.]
1. Want of power; inability; imbecility; weakness.
Some were poor by imptency of nature; as young fatherless children, old decrepit persons, idiots, and cripples. Flay.
Weakness, or the imptency of exercising animal motion, attends fevers. Arbutnot.
God is a friend and a father, whose care supplies our wants, and defends our imptency, and from whose compassion in Christ
we hope for eternal glory hereafter. Rogers's Sermons.
This is not a restraint or imptency, but the royal prerogative of the most absolute king of kings; that he wills to do nothing but what he can; and that he can do nothing which is repugnant to his divine goodness. Bentley.
2. Ungovernableness of passion. A Latin signification: animi imptentia.
Will he, so wise, let loose at once his ire,
Belike through imptency, or unaware,
To give his enemies their wish, and end
Them in his anger, whom his anger saves
To punish endless? Milton's Paradise Lost.
Yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my imptency of mind. Dryden.
3. Incapacity of propagation.
Dulness with obicency must prove
As hateful, sure, as imptency in love. Pope.
IMPTENT. adj. [imptent, Fr. imptens, Latin.]
1. Weak; feeble; wanting force; wanting power.
We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the imptent, and not please ourselves.
Yet wealth is imptent
To gain dominion, or to keep it gain'd.
Although in dreadful whirls we hung,
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor imptent to save. Addison's Spectator.
2. Disabled by nature or disease.
In those porches lay a great multitude of imptent folk, of blind, halt, and withered. Jo. v. 3.
These sat a certain man, imptent in his feet, being a cri-ple from his mother's womb, who never had walked. Acts xiv.

Delay leads imptent and snail-pac'd beggary. Shakef. R. III.
3. Without power of restraint. [Animi imptens.]
With jealous eyes at distance the had seen,
Whispering with Jove, the silver-footed queen;
Then, imptent of tongue, her silence broke;
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.
4. Without power of propagation.
He told beau Prim, who is thought imptent, that his mistress would not have him, because he is a sloven, and had committed a rape. Taiter.
IMPTENTLY. adv. [from imptent.] Without power.
Proud Caesar, 'midst triumphal cars,
The spoils of nations, and the pomp of wars,
Ignobly vain, and imptently great,
Shew'd Rome her Cato's figure drawn in state. Pope.
TO IMPTUND. v. a. [in and pound. See POUND.]
1. To inclose as in a pound; to shut in; to confine.
The great care was rather how to imptund the rebels, that none of them might escape, than that any doubt was made to vanquish them. Bacon's Henry VII.
2. To shut up in a pinfold.
England
Hath taken and imptund as a fray Shakespeare's Henry V.
The king
Seeing him wander about, I took him up for a fray, and imptund him, with intention to restore him to the right owner. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

Forms lucid stones. Thomson's Summer.
IMPREGNABLE. adj. [imprenable, French.]
1. Not to be storm'd; not to be taken.
Two giants kept themselves in a castle, seated upon the top of a rock, imprenable, because there was no coming to it but by one narrow path, where one man's force was able to keep down an army. Sidney.
Let us be back'd with God, and with the seas,
Which he hath given for fence imprenable,
And with their helps alone defend ourselves. Shakef. H. VI.
Hast thou not him, and all
Which he calls his, inclosed with a wall
Of strength imprenable? Sandys.
There the capitol thou see'st,
Above the rest lifting his stately head
On the Tarpeian rock, her citadel Imprenable. Milton's Paradise Regain'd, b. iv.
2. Unshaken; unmoved; unaffected.
The man's affection remains wholly unconcerned and imprenable; just like a rock, which, being plied continually by the waves, still throws them back again, and is not at all moved. South's Sermons.
IMPREGNABLY. adv. [from imprenable.] In such a manner as to defy force or hostility.
A castle strongly seated on a high rock, joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnably fortified. Sandys.
TO IMPREGNATE. v. a. [in and prægn, Latin.]

sexes, cannot impregnate themselves. Brown's Vulg. Err.
Impregnate, from their loins they shed
A slimy juice. Dryden's Virg. Georg.
With native earth their blood the monsters mix'd;
The blood, endu'd with animating heat,
Did in the impregnate earth new fons beget. Dryden.
2. [Impregner, French.] To fill; to saturate.
Christianity is of so prolific a nature, so apt to impregnate
the hearts and lives of its profelytes, that it is hard to imagine that any branch should want a due fertility. Decay of Piety.
IMPREGNATION. n. f. [from impregnate.]
1. The act of making prolific; fecundation.
They ought to refer matters unto counsellors, which is the first begetting or impregnation; but when they are elaborate in the womb of their counsel, and grow ripe to be brought forth, then they take the matter back into their own hands. Bacon.
2. That with which any thing is impregnated.
What could implant in the body such peculiar impregnations, as should have such power? Derham's Physico-theology.
3. [Impregnation, French.] Saturation.

The conquering chief his foot impress
On the strong neck of that destructive beast. Dryd. Ovid.
2. To fix deep.
We should dwell upon the arguments, and impress the motives of persuasion upon our own hearts, 'till we feel the force of them. Watts.
3. To force into service. This is generally now spoken and written press.
His age has charms in it, his title more,
To pluck the common bosoms on his side,
And turn our impress launces in our eyes
Which do command them. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunfinane's high hill Shall come against him.
—That will never be:
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Ormond should contribute all he could for the making those levies of men, and for impressing of ships. Clarendon.
IMPRESS. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Mark made by pressure.
This weak impress of love is as a figure
Trench'd in ice, which with an hour's heat Dissolves to water. Shakef. Two Gent. of Verona.
They having taken the impresses of the infides of these shells with that exquisite niceness, as to express even the finest lineaments of them. Woodward's Nat. History.
2. Effects upon another substance.
How objects are represented to myself I cannot be ignorant; but in what manner they are received, and what impresses they make upon the differing organs of another, he only knows that feels them. Glauco, Scip.
3. Mark of distinction; stamp.
God, surveying the works of the creation, leaves us this general impress or character upon them, that they were exceeding good. South's Sermons.

IMPUDENCE. n. f. [impudens, Fr. impudentia, Lat.] Shamelessness; lewdness; immodesty.
 I ne'er heard yet
 That any of these bolder vices wanted
 Less impudence to gain say what they did,
 Than to perform it first. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Nor did Noah's open infirmity justify Cham's impudence, or exempt him from that curse of being servant of servants. King Charles.
 Those clear truths, that either their own evidence forces us to admit, or common experience makes it impudence to deny. Locke.

IMPUDENT. adj. [impudent, Fr. impudens, Latin.] Shameless; wanting modesty.
 It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of words that come with such more than impudent lawfulness from you, can thrust me from a level consideration. Shakesp. Henry IV.

When we behold an angel, not to fear,
 Is to be impudent. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.
IMPUDENTLY. adv. [from impudent.] Shamelessly; without modesty.
 At once assail
 With open mouths, and impudently rail. Sandys.

IMP

Why should soft Fabius impudently bear
 Names gain'd by conquest in the Gallick war?
 Why lays he claim to Hercules his strain,
 Yet dares be base, effeminate, and vain? Dryden.

TO IMPUGN. v. a. [impugnare, Fr. impugno, Lat.] To attack; to assault.
 Of a strange nature is the fruit you follow;
 Yet in such rule, that the Venetian law Cannot impugn you. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

I cannot think myself engaged to discourse of lots, as to their nature, use, and allowableness; and that not only in matters of moment and business, but also of recreation, which is indeed impugned by some, though better defended by others. South's Sermons.

St. Hierom reporteth, that he saw one of these in his time; but the truth hereof I will not rashly impugn, or over-boldly affirm. Peachment on Drawing.
IMPUGNER. n. f. [from impugnare.] One that attacks or invades.

IMPUGNANCE. n. f. [French.] Impotence; inability; weakness; feebleness.
 As he would not trust Ferdinando and Maximilian for supports of war, so the impugnance of the one, and the double proceeding of the other, lay fair for him for occasions to accept of peace. Bacon's Henry VII.

IMPULSE. n. f. [impulsus, Latin.]
 1. Communicated force; the effect of one body acting upon another.
 If these little impulses set the great wheels of devotion on work, the largeness and height of that shall not at all be prejudiced by the smallness of its occasion. South's Sermons.

Bodies produce ideas in us manifestly by impulse. Locke.
 Bodies, from the impulse of a fluid, can only gravitate in proportion to their surfaces, and not according to their quantity of matter, which is contrary to experience. Chyene.

2. Influence acting upon the mind; motive; idea.
 Mean time, by Jove's impulse, Mezentius arm'd, Succeeded Turnus. Dryden's Æn.

These were my natural impulses for the undertaking; but there was an accidental motive, which was full as forcible. Dry.
 Moses saw the bush burn without being consumed, and heard a voice out of it: this was something, besides finding an impulse upon his mind to go to Pharaoh, that he might bring his brethren out of Egypt. Locke.

3. Hostile impression.
 Like two great rocks against the raging tide,
 Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,
 Sustain th' impulse, and receive the war. Prior.

IMPULSION. n. f. [impulsion, Fr. impulsus, Latin.]
 1. The agency of body in motion upon body.
 The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without sound; for that sound that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon's Natural History.

To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.
 But thou didst plead
 Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st Find some occasion to infect our foes. Milton's Agonistes.

IMPULSIVE. adj. [impulsifus, Fr. from impulsus.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.
 Nature and duty bind him to obedience;
 But those being placed in a lower sphere,
 His fierce ambition, like the highest mover,
 Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion Against their proper course. Denham's Sobhy.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free grace. South's Sermons.
 Poor men! poor papers! we and they Do some impulsive force obey,
 And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

IMPUNITY. n. f. [impunitas, Fr. impunitas, Latin.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.
 In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they may be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Davies.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never be brought to believe, that there is a crime where they see no penalty. Addison's Freeholder.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their ill-gotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Atterbury's Sermons.
IMPURE. adj. [impur, Fr. impurus, Latin.]
 1. Contrary to sanctity; unhallowed; unholy.

No more can impure man retain and move
 In that pure region of a worthy love,
 Than earthly substance can unforc'd aspire,
 And leave his nature to converse with fire. Donne.

Hypocrites austere talk,
 Condemning as impure what God has made
 Pure, and commands to some, leaves free to all. Milton.
 2. Unchaste.

IN

2. Unchaste.
If black scandal, or foul-fac'd reproach,
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meek enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof. Shaksp. R. III.
One could not devise a more proper hell for an impure spirit, than that which Plato has touched upon. Addison.
3. Feculent; foul with extraneous mixtures; droffy.
IMPU'RELY. adv. [from impure.] With impurity.

Cleanse the alimentary duct by vomiting and clysters, the impurities of which will be carried into the blood. Arbutnot.
To IMPURPLE. v. a. [from purpur, Fr. from purple.] To make red; to colour as with purple.
Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of Jasper shone, Impurpled with celestial roses, smil'd. Milton.
- IMPU'TABLE. adj. [from impute.]
1. Chargeable upon any one.
That first sort of foolishness is imputable to them. South.
2. Accusable; chargeable with a fault. Not proper.
If the wife departs from her husband, through any default of his, as on the account of cruelty, then he shall be compelled to allow her alimony; for the law deems her to be a dutiful wife as long as the fault lies at his door, and she is in no wife imputable. Ayliffe's Paragon.
- IMPU'TABLENESS. n. f. [from imputable.] The quality of being imputable.
'Tis necessary to the imputableness of an action, that it be avoidable. Norris.
- IMPU'TATION. n. f. [from imputare, Fr. from impute.]
1. Attribution of any thing: generally of ill.
Trust to me, Ulysses;
Our imputation shall be oddly pois'd
In this wild action. Shaksp. Troilus and Cressida.
If a son that is sent by his father about merchandize, do fall into some lewd action, the imputation of his wickedness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shaksp. Lear.
To use intellects and volitions in the infinite essence, as hypotheses, is allowable; but a rigorous imputation is derogatory to him, and arrogant in us. Glauco. Scept.
I have formerly said that I could distinguish your writings from those of any others: 'tis now time to clear myself from any imputation of self-conceit on that subject. Dryden.
2. Sometimes of good.
If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shaksp. Lear.
3. Censure; reproach.
Whatever happens they also the least feel that scourge of vulgar imputation, which notwithstanding they deserve. Hooker.
Let us be careful to guard ourselves against these groundless imputations of our enemies, and to rise above them. Addison.
Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter.
Swift.
4. Hint; reflection.
Antonio is a good man.
—Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?
—No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
- IMPU'TATIVE. adj. [from impute.] That which may impute.
To IMPUTE. v. a. [from impute, Fr. impute, Lat. imputare.]
1. To charge upon; to attribute: generally till; sometimes good.
It was imputed to him for righteousness. Ro. iv. 22.
Men in their innovations should follow the example of time, which innovateth but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived;
for otherwise whatsoever is new and unlooked for, ever mends some, and pairs others; and he that is holpen takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputeth it to the author. Bacon's Essays.
I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy those who imputed it to folly. Temple.
Impute your dangers to our ignorance.
This obscurity cannot be imputed to want of language in so great a master of stile. Locke.
I have read a book imputed to lord Bathurst, called a dissertation on parties. Swift.
2. To reckon to one what does not properly belong to him.
Thy merit
Imputed shall absolve them who renounce
Their own both righteous and unrighteous deeds. Milton.
- IMPU'TER. n. f. [from impute.] He that imputes.
IN. prep. [in, Lat. in.]
1. Noting the place where any thing is present.

IN

- In* school of love are all things taught we see;
There learn'd this maid of arms the iredful guise. Fairfax.
Is this place here not sufficient strong
To guard us in? Daniel's Civil War.
2. Noting the state present at any time.
The other is only by error and misconception named the ordinance of Jesus Christ: no one proof is yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in every deed. Hooker.
Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes. Shaksp.
Sir Edmond Courtney, and the haughty prelate,
With many more confederates, are in arms. Shak. R. III.
Danger before, and in, and after the act,
You needs must grant is great. Daniel's Civil War.
However it be in knowledge, I may truly say it is of no use at all in probabilities; for the assent there, being to be determined by the preponderance, after a due weighing of all the proofs on both sides, nothing is so unfit to assist the mind in that as syllogism.
Locke.
In all likelihood I brought all my limbs out of the bed, which, 'tis probable, he has not done off the bright God hath made our eternal and temporal interests, in most cases, very consistent. Shaksp. Lear.
None was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they had most abused. Letter to Publ. of Duciad.
 3. Noting the time.
When we would consider eternity a parte ante, what do we but, beginning from ourselves and the present time we are in, repeat in our minds the ideas of years or ages past, with a prospect of proceeding in such addition with all the infinity of numbers? Locke.
 4. Noting power.
To feed mens souls, quoth he, is not in man. Hubb. Tale.
 5. Noting proportion.
Let usury in general be reduced to five in the hundred, and let that rate be proclaimed to be free and current. Bacon.
I cannot but lament the common course, which, at least, nine in ten of those who enter into the ministry are obliged to enter. Swift.
 6. Concerning.
I only consider what he, who is allowed to have carried this argument forth, has said in it. Locke.
 7. For the sake. A solemn phrase.
Now, in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat does this our Caesar feed,
That he is grown so great? Shaksp. Julius Caesar.
In the name of the people,
And in the power of us the tribunes, we Banish him our city. Shaksp. Coriolanus.
Now, in the name of honour, sir, I beg you
That I may see your father's death reveng'd. Dryden.
 8. Noting cause.
King Henry, be thy title right or wrong,
Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shaksp. H. VI.
 9. In that. Because.
Some things they do in that they are men; in that they are wife men, and christian men, some things; some things in that they are men mis'd, and blinded with error. Hooker.
He cannot brook such disgrace well, as he shall run into;
in that it is a thing of his own search, and against my will.
Shaksp. As you like it.
 10. In as much. Since; seeing that.
Those things are done voluntarily by us, which other creatures do naturally, in as much as we might stay our doing of them if we would. Hooker.
 - IN. adv.
1. Within some place; not out.
How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable person; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of falsehood as to play in and out, and show tricks with oaths, the sacred bonds which the conscience of man can be bound with. South's Sermons.
I fear me, you'll be in 'till then. Shaksp. Lear.
 2. Engaged to any affair.
We know the worst can come: 'tis thought upon:
We cannot shift being in; we must go on.
These pragmatical flies value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing. L'Estr.
 3. Placed in some state.
Poor rogues talk of court news,
Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shaksp.
Must never patriot then declaim at gin,
Unless, good man, he has been fairly in. Pope.
 4. Noting entrance.
Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shaksp. Lear.
He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?
—Let me see't, I'll in: I'll in: follow your friend's advice, I'll in. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
In the said cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve larger than could be introduced in at either of those holes.
Woodward on P. 151.

INA

5. Into any place.
Is it not more eligible to come in with a smooth gale, than to be tossed at sea with a storm. Collier.
Next fill the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in. Dryd. Georg.
6. Close; home.
The posture of left-handed fencers is so different from that of the right-handed, that you run upon their swords if you push forward; and they are in with you, if you offer to fall back without keeping your guard. Tatler.
IN has commonly in composition a negative or privative sense, as in the Latin: so, active denotes that which acts, inactive that which does not act. In before r is changed into r; as irregular: before l into l; as ilative: and into m before some other consonants; as improbable.
INABILITY. n. f. [in and ability.] Impuissance; impotence;
want of power.
If no natural nor casual inability cross their desires, they always delighting to insure themselves with actions most beneficial to others, cannot but gather great experience, and thro' experience the more wisdom. Hooker.
Neither ignorance nor inability can be pretended; and what plea can we offer to divine justice to prevent condemnation?
Rogers.
- INABSTINENCE. n. f. [in and abstinence.] Intemperance;
want of power to abstain.
Diseases dire, of which a monstrous crew
Before thee shall appear, that thou may'st know
What misery the inabstinence of Eve Shall bring on man. Milt. Par. Lost.
- INACCESSIBLE. adj. [inaccessibile, Fr. in and accessible.] Not to be reached; not to be approached.
Whatever you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time. Shaksp. Lear.
Many other hidden parts of nature, even of a far lower form, are inaccessible to us. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
There shall we clearly see the ends and uses of these things, which here were either too subtle for us to penetrate, or too remote and inaccessible for us to come to any distinct view of.
Ray on the Creation.
This part, which is so noble, is not altogether inaccessible; and that an easy way may be found to it, 'tis to consider nature and to copy her. Dryden.
- INACCURACY. n. f. [from inaccurate.] Want of exactness.
INACCURATE. adj. [in and accurate.] Not exact; not accurate.
It is used sometimes of persons, but more frequently of performances.
- INACTION. n. f. [inaction, Fr. in and action.] Cessation from labour; forbearance of labour.
The times and amusements past are not more like a dream to me, than those which are present: I lie in a refreshing kind of inaction. Pope.
- INACTIVE. adj. [in and active.] Not busy; not diligent;
idle; indolent; sluggish.
- INACTIVELY. adv. [from inactive.] Idly; without labour;
without motion; sluggishly.
In seasons of perfect freedom, mark how your son spends his time; whether he inactively loiters it away, when left to his own inclination. Locke.
- INACTIVITY. n. f. [in and activity.] Idleness; rest; sluggishness.
A doctrine which manifestly tends to discourage the endeavours of men, to introduce a lazy inactivity, and neglect of the ordinary means of grace. Rogers's Sermons.
Virtue, conceal'd within our breast,
Is inactivity at best. Swift.
- INADEQUATE. adj. [in and adequatus, Lat. in and adequatus.] Not equal to the purpose; defective; falling below the due proportion.
Remember for vice
Not paid, or paid inadequate in price,
What farther means can reason now direct? Dryden.
Inadequate ideas are such, which are but a partial or incomplete representation of those archetypes to which they are referred.
Locke.
- INADEQUATELY. adv. [from inadequate.] Defectively; not completely.
These pores they may either exactly fill, or but inadequately.
Boyle.
- INADVERTENCE. n. f. [inadvertence, French; from inadvertent.]
INADVERTENCY. n. f. [inadvertency, French; from inadvertent.]
1. Carelessness; negligence; inattention.
There is a vast difference between them; indeed, as vast as between inadvertency and deliberation, between surprise and set purpose. South.
From an habitual heedless inadvertency, men are so intent upon the present that they mind nothing else. L'Estrange.
2. Act or effect of negligence.
Many persons have lain under great and heavy scandals, which have taken their first rise only from some inadvertency or indecision. Government of the Tongue.
The productions of a great genius, with many lapses and

INA

- inadvertencies*, are infinitely preferable to the works of an inferior kind of author, which are scrupulously exact. Addison.
- INADVERTENT. adj. [in and advertens, Latin.] Negligent; careless.
- INADVERTENTLY. adv. [from inadvertent.] Carelessly; negligently.
Aristotle mentions Telegonus as the son of Circe and Ulysses, who afterwards slew his father with the bone of a fish inadvertently.
Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.
Worthy persons, if inadvertently drawn into a deviation, will endeavour instantly to recover their lost ground. Clarissa.
- INALIENABLE. adj. [in and alienable.] That cannot be alienated.
- INALIMENTAL. adj. [in and alimental.] Affording no nourishment.
Dulcoration importeth a degree to nourishment; and the making of things inalimental to become alimental, may be an experiment of great profit for making new victual. Bacon.
- INAMISSIBLE. adj. [inamissible, French; in and amissum, Lat.]
Not to be lost.
These advantages are inamissible. Hammond.
- INANE. adj. [inanis, Latin.] Empty; void.
We sometimes speak of place in the great inane, beyond the confines of the world. Locke.
- To INANIMATE. v. a. [in and animare, Latin.] To animate;
to quicken. This word is not in use.
There's a kind of world remaining still,
Though the which did inanimate and fill
The world be gone; yet in this last long night
Her ghost doth walk, that is, a glimmering light. Donne.
- INANIMATE. n. f. [inanimatus, Latin; inanimé, French.]
INANIMATED. n. f. [inanimatus, Latin; inanimé, French.]
1. Void of life; without animation.
The spirits of animate bodies are all in some degree kindled;
but inanimate bodies have their spirits no whit inflamed.
Bacon's Natural History.
The golden goddess, present at the pray'r,
Well knew he meant th' inanimated fair,
And gave the sign of granting. Dryden.
All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves. Bentley.
They can neither subtil nor be produced by the powers of mechanism; for both require the constant influence of a principle different from that which governs the inanimate part of the universe. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
- From roofs when Verrio's colours fall,
And leave inanimate the naked wall,
Still in thy song should vanquish'd France appear. Pope.
- INANIMATION. n. f. [inanimatio, Fr. inanimis, Lat.] Emptiness of body; want of fulness in the vessels of the animal.
Weakness which attends fevers proceeds from too great fulness in the beginning, and too great inanimation in the latter end of the disease. Arbutnot on Diet.
- INANITY. n. f. [from inanis, Latin.] Emptiness; void space.
This opinion excludes all such inanity, and admits no vacuities but so little ones as no body whatever can come to, but will be bigger than they, and must touch the corporal parts which those vacuities divide. Digby on Bodies.
- INAPPETENCY. n. f. [in and appetentia, Latin.] Want of stomach or appetite.
- INAPPLICABLE. adj. [in and applicabile.] Not to be put to a particular use.
- INAPPLICATION. n. f. [inapplication, Fr. in and application.]
Indolence; negligence.
- INARABLE. adj. [in and aro, Latin.] Not capable of tillage.
Diët.
- To INARCH. v. a. [in and arch.]
Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmynes, walnuts firrs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

INB

INARTICULATE. adj. [inarticulatus, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters. Wilkins's Math. Magic.
By the harmony of words we elevate the mind to a sense of devotion; as our solemn music, which is inarticulate poetry, does in churches. Dryden.

INARTICULATELY. adv. [from inarticulate.] Not distinctly.
INARTICULATENESS. n. f. [from inarticulate.] Confusion of sounds; want of distinctness in pronouncing.

INARTIFICIAL. adj. [in and artificial.] Contrary to art.
I have ranked this among the effects; and it may be thought inartificial to make it the cause also. Decay of Piety.

INARTIFICIALLY. adv. [from inartificial.] Without art; in a manner contrary to the rules of art.

This lofty humour is clumsily and inartificially managed, when its affected by those of a self-denying profession. Collier.
INATTENTION. n. f. [inattention, Fr. in and attention.] Disregard; negligence; neglect.

Persons keep out of the reach of the reproofs of the ministry, or hear with such inattention or contempt as renders them of little effect. Rogers's Sermons.

We see a strange inattention to this most important prospect. Rogers's Sermons.

Novel lays attract our ravish'd ears;
But old, the mind with inattention hears. Pope.
INATTENTIVE. adj. [in and attentive.] Careless; negligent; regardless.

If we indulge the frequent roving of passions, we shall procure an unsteady and inattentive habit. Watts.

INAUDIBLE. adj. [in and audible.] Not to be heard; void of sound.

Let's take the infant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'nt decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakespeare.

TO INAUGURATE. v. a. [inauguro, Latin.] To consecrate; to invest with a new office by solemn rites; to begin with good omens; to begin.

Those beginnings of years were propitious to him, as if kings did chuse remarkable days to inaugurate their favours, that they may appear acts as well of the time as of the will. Watson.

INAUGURATION. n. f. [inauguration, Fr. inauguro, Latin.] Investiture by solemn rites.

The royal olive was solemnly sworn, at his inauguration, to observe these things inviolable. Howell's Vocal Exercise.

At his regal inauguration his old father resigned the kingdom to him. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INAURATION. n. f. [inauro, Latin.] The act of gilding or covering with gold.

The Romans had the art of gilding after our manner; but some sort of their inauration, or gilding, must have been much dearer than ours. Arbutnot on Coins.

INAUSPICIOUS. adj. [in and auspicious.] Ill-omened; unlucky; unfortunate.

Oh here
I will set up my everlasting rest;
And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars
From this world-wearied flesh. Shakesp. Rom. and Juliet.

Though heaven's inauspicious eye
Lay black on love's nativity,
Her eye a strong appeal can give;
Beauty, smiles, and love shall live. Craftshaw.

The stars feel not the diseases their inauspicious influence produces. Boyle.

With inauspicious love a wretched swain
Pursu'd the fairest nymph of all the plain;
She plung'd him hopeless in a deep despair. Dryden.

INBEING. n. f. [in and being.] Inherence; inseparableness.

When we say the bowl is round, the boy is witty, there are proper or inherent modes; for they have a sort of inbeing in the substance itself, and do not arise from the addition of any other substance to it. Watts.

INBORN. adj. [in and born.] Innate; implanted by nature.

Led by sense of good,
Inborn to all, I sought my needful food. Dryden.

All passions being inborn with us, we are almost equally judges of them. Dryden.

Some Carolina, to heaven's dictates true,
Thy inborn worth with conscious eyes shall see,
And slight th' imperial diadem for thee. Addison.

INBREATHED. adj. [in and breath.] Inspired; infused by inspiration.

Blest pair of syrens, pledges of heav'n's joy,
Sphere-born harmonious sisters, voice and verse,
Wed your divine sounds, and mixt power employ,
Dead things with inbreath'd sense able to pierce. Milton.

INBRED. adj. [in and bred.] Produced within; hatched or generated within.

INC

My inbred enemy

Forth issu'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, l. ii.
A man thinks better of his children than they deserve; but there is an impulse of tenderness, and there must be some esteem for the setting of that inbred affection at work. L'Estr.

But he unmov'd contemns their idle threat;
And inbred worth doth boasting valour slight. Dryden.

TO INCAGE. v. a. [in and cage.] To coop up; to shut up; to confine in a cage, or any narrow space.

And yet incaged in so small a verge,
Thy waste is no whit lesser than thy lord's. Shakesp. R. II.

It made my imprisonment a pleasure;
Ay, such a pleasure as incaged birds Conceive. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

INCALESCE. n. f. [incalisco, Latin.] The state of growth; ing warm; warmth; incipient heat.

Avetores restrained his hilarity, making no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incaliscence, and regulated effusion from wine. Brown.

The oil preserves the ends of the bones from incaliscence, which they, being solid bodies, would necessarily contract from a swift motion. Ray on the Creation.

INCANTATION. n. f. [incantation, Fr. incanto, Lat.] Charms uttered by singing; enchantment.

My ancient incantations are too weak,
And hell too strong. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

By Adam's hearkening to his wife, mankind, by that her incantation, became the subject of labour, sorrow, and death. Raleigh's History of the World.

The great wonders of witches, their carrying in the air, and transforming themselves into other bodies, are reported to be wrought, not by incantations or ceremonies, but by anointing themselves all over, move a man to think that these fables are the effects of imagination; for ointments, if laid on any thing thick, by stopping of the pores, shut in the vapours, and send them to the head extremely. Bacon's Natural History.

The name of a city being discovered unto their enemies, their penates and patronal gods might be called forth by charms and incantations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The nuptial rights his outrage strait attends;
The dow'r desir'd is his transgurg'd friends;
The incantation backward she repeats,
Inverts her rod, and what she did, defeats. Garth.

The commands which our religion hath imposed on its followers are not like the absurd ceremonies of pagan idolatry, the frivolous rites of their initiations and worship, that might look like incantations and magick, but had no tendency to make mankind the happier. Bentley's Sermons.

INCANTATORY. adj. [from incanto, Latin.] Dealing by enchantment; magical.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the like incantatory impostors, daily delude them. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

TO INCANTON. v. a. [in and canton.] To unite to a canton or separate community.

When the cantons of Bern and Zurich proposed the incorporating Geneva in the cantons, the Roman catholics, fearing the prestant interest, proposed the incantoning of Constance as a counterpoise. Addison on Italy.

INCAPABILITY. n. f. [from incapable.] Inability natural; INCAPABLENESS. n. f. [from incapable.] Disqualification legal.

You have nothing to urge but a kind of incapability in yourself to the service. Suckling.

INCAPABLE. adj. [incapable, Fr. in and capable.]

1. Wanting power; wanting understanding; unable to comprehend, learn, or understand.

Incapable and shallow innocents!
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death. Shakesp.

2. Not able to receive any thing.

Wilmot, when he saw Goring put in the command, thought himself incapable of reparation. Carendon.

3. Unable, not equal to any thing.

Is not your father grown incapable
Of reasonable affairs? Is he not stupid
With age? Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

4. Disqualified by law.

Their lands are almost entirely taken from them, and they are rendered incapable of purchasing any more. Swift.

5. In conversation it is usual to say a man is incapable of falsehood, or incapable of generosity, or of any thing good or bad.

INCAPACIOUS. adj. [in and capacious.] Narrow; of small content.

Souls that are made little and incapacious cannot enlarge their thoughts to take in any great compass of times or things.

The inactivity of the soul is its incapacity to be moved with anything common. Arbutnot.

TO INCARCERATE. v. a. [incarcero, Latin.] To imprison; to confine. It is used in the Scots law to denote imprisoning or confining in a gaol; otherwise it is seldom found.

The pestilent contagion may be propagated by those dense bodies, that easily incarcerate the infected air; as woollen cloaths. Harvey on Consumptions.

INCARCERATION. n. f. [from incarcerate.] Imprisonment; confinement.

TO INCARNATE. v. a. [incarno, Latin.] To cover with flesh.

The flesh will soon arise in that cut of the bone, and make exfoliation of what is necessary, and incarnate it. Wise man.

TO INCARNATE. v. n. To breed flesh.

The slough came off, and the ulcer happily incarnated. Wise man.

TO INCARNADINE. v. a. [incarnadine, Fr. incarnadino, pale red, Italian.] To dye red. This word I find only once.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather
The multitudinous sea incarnadine, Making the green one red. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO INCARNATE. v. a. [incarnare, Fr. incarno, Latin.]

1. To cloath with flesh; to embody with flesh.

I, who erst contended
With gods to fit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast, and mix with bestial slime,
This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton.

INCARNATE. participial adj. [incarnatus, Fr. from the verb.]

1. Cloathed with flesh; embodied in flesh.

Undoubtedly even the nature of God itself, in the person of the son, is incarnate, and hath taken to itself flesh. Hooker.

They say he cried out of women.

—Yes, that he did, and said they were devils incarnate. Shak.

A most wise sufficient means of redemption and salvation, by the satisfactory death and obedience of the incarnate son of God, Jesus Christ, God blessed for ever. Senderson.

Here shalt thou fit incarnate, here shalt reign
Both God and man. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.

2. It may be doubted whether Swift understood this word.

But he's possit,
Incarnate with a thousand imps. Swift.

3. In Scotland incarnate is applied to any thing tinged of a deep red colour, from its resemblance to a flesh colour.

INCARNATION. n. f. [incarnation, Fr. from incarnate.]

1. The act of assuming body.

We must beware we exclude not the nature of God from incarnation, and so make the son of God incarnate not to be very God. Hooker.

Upon the annunciation, or our Lady-day, meditate on the incarnation of our blessed Saviour. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

2. The state of breeding flesh.

The pulsation from the cicatrix proceeded from the too lax incarnation of the wound. Wise man's Surgery.

INCARNATIVE. n. f. [incarnativus, Fr. from incarnare.] A medicine that generates flesh.

I deterged the abscess, and incarnated by the common incarnative. Wise man's Surgery.

It is neither a substance perfect, nor a substance inchoate, or in the way of perfection. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

INCHOATION. n. f. [inchoatus, Lat.] Inception; beginning.

It discerneth of four kinds of causes; forces, frauds, crimes various of felonate, and the inchoations or middle acts towards crimes capital, not actually perpetrated. Bacon's Henry VII.

The setting on foot some of those arts in those parts would be looked upon as the first inchoation of them, which yet would be but their reviving. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

INCHOATIVE. adj. [inchoative, Fr. inchoativus, Latin.] Inceptive; noting inchoation or beginning.

TO INCIDE. v. a. [from incido, to cut, Latin.]

Medicines are said to incide which consist of pointed and sharp particles; as acids, and most salts, by which the particles of other bodies are divided from one another: thus some expectorating medicines are said to incide or cut the phlegm. Quincy.

The menses are promoted by all saponaceous substances, which incide the mucus in the first passages. Arbutnot.

INCIDENCE. n. f. [incido, to fall, Latin; incidences, French.]

INCIDENCY. n. f. [incido, to fall, Latin; incidences, French.]

1. The direction with which one body strikes upon another, and the angle made by that line, and the plane struck upon, is called the angle of incidence. In the occurrences of two moving bodies, their incidence is said to be perpendicular or oblique, as their directions or lines of motion make a straight line or an oblique angle at the point of contact. Quincy.

In mirrors there is the like angle of incidence, from the object to the glass, and from the glass to the eye. Bacon.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed. Newton's Opt.

The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays. Newton.

He enjoys his happy state most when he communicates it, and receives a more vigorous joy from the reflexion than from the direct incidence of his happiness. Norris.

2. [Incident, Latin.] Accident; hap; casualty.

What incidence thou do'st guess of harm declare,
Is creeping towards me. Shakep. Winter's Tale.

INC

INCIDENT. adj. [incident, Fr. incident, Latin.]

1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidentally; falling in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise mens rarer incident necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered. Hobbes.

I would note in children not only their articulate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incident occasions. Watts.

In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which make another proposition: as, every man, who is pious, shall be saved: Julius, whose surname was Cæsar, overcame Pompey: bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition. Watts.

2. Happening; apt to happen.

Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be sometimes guilty of. South's Sermons.

INCIDENT. n. f. [incident, Fr. from the adjective.] Something happening beside the main design; casualty.

His wisdom will fall into it as an incident to the point of lawfulness. Bacon's Holy War.

No person, no incident in the play, but must be of use to carry on the main design. Dryden's Dufresney.

INCITATION. n. f. [incitatio, Latin.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse.

Dr. Ridley, in his tract of magnetical bodies, defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity, an union of one magnetical body unto another. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The multitude of objects do proportionally multiply both the possibilities and incitations. Governor of the Tongue.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity. Decay of Piety.

TO INCITE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.] To stir up; to push forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urge on.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to? Shakep. H. V.

No blown ambition doth our arms incite,
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right. Shakep. Romeo.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom. Bacon.

The principles of nature and common reason, which in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

INCITEMENT. n. f. [from incite.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting power.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

A person sent higher by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island. Milton.

If thou must reform the stubborn times,
From the long records of distant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage. Pope's Statius.

2. A kind of rudeness.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, uncomely jests, loud talking and jeering, which, in civil account, are called indecencies and incivilities. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

INCLEMENCY. n. f. [inclemence, Fr. inclementia, Latin.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
In heaven's inclemency some ease we find:
Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left. Dryden.

INCLEMENT. adj. [in and clement, Latin.] Unmerciful; unpitying; void of tenderness; harsh.

Teach us further by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail and snow. Milton.

I stand
Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land;
Propitious to my wants, a vest supply,
To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky. Pope.

INCLINABLE. adj. [inclinabilis, Latin.]

1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition.

People are not always inclinable to the best. Spenser.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

The gall and bitterness of certain mens writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured. Hooker.

Desire,
Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Having a tendency.

If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the last; but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally. Bentley.

INCLINATION. n. f. [inclination, inclination, Fr. inclinatio, Lat.]

1. Tendency towards any point.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter. Newton's Opt.

INC

2. Natural aptness.

Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil leans that way. Addison.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.

The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally aliened from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage. Clarendon.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet, in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well-inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law. South's Sermons.

4. Love; affection.

We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting. Dryden.

5. Disposition of mind.

Bid him
Report the features of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.

6. The tendency of the magnetical needle to the East or West.

INCLINATORY. adj. [from inclino.] Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

If that inclinatory virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCLINATORILY. adv. [from inclinatory.] Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from North and South.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatoryly, or somewhat equinoxially, that is, toward the eastern or western points, they discover some verticity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO INCLINE. v. n. [inclino, Latin; inclinor, Fr.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend towards any part.

Her house inclined unto death, and her paths unto the dead. Prov. ii. 18.

Still to this place
My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes;
Hither my feet unbidden find their way. Rowe.

2. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.

Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?
—He seems indifferent;
Or rather swaying more upon our part. Shak. H. V.

TO INCLINE. v. a.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.

The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumb'rous weight, inclines
Our eyelids. Milton.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the baron fate inclines the field. Pope.

A tow'ring structure to the palace join'd;
To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclined. Pope.

2. To turn the desire towards any thing.

3. To bend; to incurvate.

With due respect my body I inclin'd,
As to some being of superior kind,
And made my court. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

TO INCLIP. v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp; to inclose; to surround.

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,
Is thine, if thou wilt ha't. Shakep. Ant. and Cleopatra.

TO INCLOUD. v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.

In their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be inclouded,
And forc'd to drink their vapour. Shakep. Romeo.

TO INCLUDE. v. a. [include, Latin.]

1. To inclose; to shut in.

2. To comprise; to comprehend.

This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one intire leaf.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included. Swift.

INCLUSIVE. adj. [inclusif, French.]

1. Inclosing; encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that mult round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to fear me to the brain. Shak. R. III.

2. Comprehended in the sum or number: as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,
From courts inclusive down to cells. Swift.

INCLUSIVELY. adv. [from inclusus.] The thing mentioned reckoned into the account.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively. Hale.

All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inclusively; and is differenced partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating. Holder's Element of Speech.

INCOAGULABLE. adj. [in and coagulable.] Incapable of concretion.

INCOEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and coexistence.] The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCOG. adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Latin.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog, Depend upon it, he'll remain incog. Addison.

INCOGITANCY. n. f. [incogitantia, Latin.] Want of thought.

One man's fancies are laws to others, who convey them as such to their successors, who afterwards misname all unobviousness to their incogitancy presumption. Boyle.

Next to the stupid and merely vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration. Dec. of Piety.

INCOGITATIVE. adj. [in and cogitative.] Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beards, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings. Locke.

INCOGNITO. adv. [incognitus, Latin.] In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago Since gods came down incognito. Prior.

INCOHERENCE. n. f. [in and coherence.]

INCOHERENCY. n. f. [in and coherence.]

1. Want of connection; incongruity; incoherence; want of dependance of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handiome together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

2. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaster be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.

INCOHERENT. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependance of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

2. Without cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as puerous as those of marble or gravel. Woodw.

INCOHERENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.] Inconsistently; inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally and incoherently. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

INCOLUMITY. n. f. [incolumitas, Latin.] Safety; security. A word very little in use.

The parliament is necessary to assert and preserve the national rights of a people, with the incolumity and welfare of a country. Havel.

INCOMBUSTIBILITY. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Appennines is remarkable for its shining quality, and the amianthus for its incombustibility. Ray.

INCOMBUSTIBLE. adj. [incombustibilis, Fr. in and combustibilis.] Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustibilis, and not consumable by fire. Wilkins.

INCOMBUSTIBLENESS. n. f. [from incombustibilis.] The quality of not being wasted by fire.

INCOME. n. f. [in and come.] Revenue; produce of anything.

Thou who reapest at the plenty of thy neighbour, and the greatness of his incomes, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this. South's Sermons.

No fields afford So large an income to the village lord. Dryden's Georg.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income but what arises from its trade: the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture. Addison on Italy.

Notwithstanding the large incomes annexed to some few of her preferments, this church hath in the whole little to subsist on. Atterbury's Sermons.

INCOMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from incommensurable.] The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

INCOMMENSURABLE. adj. [French, from in, com, and mensurable, Latin.] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature. Watts.

INCOMMENSURATE. adj. [in, com, and mensura, Latin.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrate, which, to our apprehension, are incommensurate, are yet commensurate to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect. More.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; so we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incommensurate to one another, for civil use, measuring the greater by the less. Holder on Time.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any greater space of time may be said to comprehend a less, though the less space be incommensurate to the greater. Holder on Time.

TO INCOMMUNICATE. v. a. [incommunico, Lat. incommunico, To INCOMMUNICATE. Fr.] To be inconvenient to; to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

A gnat, planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommode ye, says he, I'll remove. L'Estrange.

Although they sometimes molest and incommode the inhabitants of some parts, yet the agent, whereby both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensable necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it. Woodward's Natural History.

INCOMMODOUS. adj. [incommodus, Latin.] Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience doth ever follow it? may by some accident be incommodious to a few. Holder.

Mens intentions in speaking are to be understood, without frequent explanations and incommodious interruptions. Locke.

INCOMMODOUSLY. adv. [from incommodious.] Inconveniently; not at ease.

INCOMMODOUSNESS. n. f. [from incommodious.] Inconvenience.

Diseases, disorders, and the incommodiousness of external nature, are inconsistent with happiness. Burnet.

INCOMMUNITY. n. f. [incommunitas, Fr. incommunitas, Latin.] Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, what incommunitas you have conceived to be in the common law, which I would have thought most free from all such dislike. Spenser's State of Ireland.

If iron can be incorporated with flint or stone, without over great charge, or other incommunitas, the cheapness doth make the compound stuff profitable. Bacon.

By considering the region and the winds, one might to cast the rooms, which shall most need fire, that he should little fear the incommunitas of smok. Watson's Architecture.

INCOMMUNICABILITY. n. f. [from incommunicable.] The quality of not being impartible.

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [incommunicabilis, Fr. in and communicabilis.] 1. Not impartible; not to be made the common right, property, or quality of more than one.

They cannot ask more than I can give, may I but reserve to myself the incommunicable jewel of my conscience. K. Charles.

Only the God of nature perfectly knows her; and light without darkness is the incommunicable claim of him that dwells in light inaccessible. Glenn.

It was agreed on both sides, that there was one supreme excellency, which was incommunicable to any creatures. Stillings.

2. Not to be expressed; not to be told.

Neither did he treat them with these peculiarities of favour in the extraordinary discoveries of the gospel only, but also of those incommunicable revelations of the divine love, in reference to their own personal interest in it. South's Sermons.

INCOMMUNICABLY. adv. [from incommunicable.] In a manner not to be imparted or communicated.

To annihilate is both in reason, and by the consent of divines, as incommunicably the effect of a power divine, and above nature, as is creation itself. Hakewill on Providence.

INCOMMUNICATING. adj. [in and communicating.] Having no intercourse with each other.

The judgments and administrations of common justice carry a consonancy one to another, whereby both are preserved from that confusion that would ensue, if the administration was by several incommunicating hands, or by provincial establishments. Hale's Common Law.

INCOMPACT. adj. [in and compact.] Not joined; not cohering.

Salt, say they, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended, but would remain incompact. Boyle.

INCOMPARABLE. adj. [incomparable, Fr. in and comparable.] Excellent above compare; excellent beyond all competition.

My heart would not suffer me to omit any occasion, whereby I might make the incomparable Pamela see how much extraordinary devotion I bore to her service. Sidney.

A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were To an untirable and continue goodnes. Shakep. Timon.

Her words do shew her wit incomparable. Shakep. H. VI.

Now this talk Was cried incomparable, and th' ensuing night Made it a fool and beggar. Shakep. Henry VIII.

If I could leave this argument of your incomparable beauty, I might turn to one which would equally oppress me with its greatness. Dryden.

INCOMPARABLY. adv. [from incomparable.]

1. Beyond comparison; without competition.

A founder it had, whom I think incomparably the wisest man that ever the French church did enjoy, since the hour it enjoyed him. Hooker.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South's Sermons.

2. Excellently; to the highest degree. A low phrase.

There are the heads of Antoninus Pius, the Faustina's, and Marcus Aurelius, all incomparably well cut. Addison on Italy.

INCOMPASSIONATE. adj. [in and compassionate.] Void of pity; void of tenderness.

INCOMPATIBILITY. n. f. [properly incompatibility, in and compatibilis, Latin.] Inconsistency of one thing with another.

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Watson.

The reason of the fires rests not upon the incompatibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intention or extension; but the incompatibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLE. [incompatible, French; rather incomptabilis, as it is sometimes written; in and compatibilis, Lat.] Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else.

Fortune and love have ever been incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Suckl.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompatible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hamm.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the incompatibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Bent.

INCOMPATIBLY. adv. [from incompatibilis, from incompatibilis.] Inconsistently.

INCOMPETENCY. n. f. [incompetence, Fr. from incompetent.] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCOMPETENT. adj. [in and competent.] Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretences, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon's H. VII.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove the grosser faults of others. Government of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it, must be left to the opinion of the world, in spite of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCOMPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent.] Unfitly; unduly.

INCOMPLETE. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete and maimed without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLETENESS. n. f. [from incomplete.] Imperfection; unfinished state.

The incompleteness of our seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness; but of an intire possession. Boyle.

INCOMPLIANCE. n. f. [in and compliance.]

1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictory temper. Self-conceit produces peevishness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent. Tillston's Sermons.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniences that can attend our incompliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of an offended God. Rogers.

Somewhat incomposed they are in their trimmings, and extraordinary tender of their young ones. Hovel.

IMPOSSIBILITY. n. f. [from impossibile.] Quality of being not possible but by the negation or destruction of something; inconsistency with something.

The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same fitness in any modification. More.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally impossible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude, yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from individuals already actually distinguished. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

IMPOSSIBLE. adj. [in, con, and possible.] Not possible together; not possible but by the negation of something else.

IMPREHENSIBILITY. n. f. [imprehenibilitas, Fr. from imprehenibilis.] Unconceivableness; superiority to human understanding.

IMPREHENSIBLY. adv. [imprehenibilis, Fr. in and comprehensibilis.]

1. Not to be conceived; not to be fully understood.

His precepts tend to the improving and perfecting the most valuable part of us, and annexing imprehenensible rewards as an eternal weight of glory. Hammond.

One thing more is imprehenensible in this matter. Locke.

The laws of vegetation, life, sustenance, and propagation are the arbitrary pleasure of God, and may vary in manners imprehenensible to our imaginations. Bentley.

2. Not to be contained. Not now used.

Preference every where is the sequel of an infinite and imprehenensible substance; for what can be every where but that which can no where be comprehended? Hooker.

IMPREHENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from imprehenibilis.] Unconceivableness.

I might argue from God's imprehenensibleness: if we could believe nothing but what we have ideas of, it would be impossible for us to believe God is imprehenensible. Watts.

IMPREHENSIBLY. adv. [from imprehenibilis.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom are all things, is imprehenensibly infinite. Locke.

IMPRESSIBLE. adj. [impressibilis, Fr. in and comprehensibilis.] Not capable of being compressed into less space.

They ascribe to God, in relation to every man, an eternal, unchangeable, and inconditionate decree of election or reprobation. Boyle.
INCONFORMITY. n. f. [in and conformity.] Incompliance with the practice of others.
We have thought their opinion to be, that utter inconformity with the church of Rome was not an extremity whereunto we should be drawn for a time, but the very mediocrity itself, wherein they meant we should ever continue. Hooker.
INCONFUSION. n. f. [in and confusion.] Distinctness.
The cause of the confusion in founts, and the inconfusion in species visible, is, for that the light worketh in right lines, and so there can be no coincidence in the eye; but founts that move in oblique and arcuate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one the other. Bacon.
INCONGRUENCE. n. f. [in and congruence.] Unfuitableness; want of adaptation.
Humidity is but relative, and depends upon the congruity or incongruence of the component particles of the liquor to the pores of the bodies it touches. Boyle.
INCONGRUITY. n. f. [incongruitas, Fr. from incongruous.]
1. Unfuitableness of one thing to another.
The fathers make use of this acknowledgment of the incongruity of images to the Deity, from thence to prove the incongruity of the worship of them. Stillington.
2. Incongruity; inconsequence; absurdity; impropriety.
To avoid absurdities and incongruities, is the same law established for both arts: the painter is not to paint a cloud at the bottom of a picture, nor the poet to place what is proper to the end in the beginning of a poem. Dryden.
3. Disagreement of parts; want of symmetry.
She, whom after what form loe'er we see,
Is discord and rude incongruity;
She, the is dead, the's dead. Donne.
INCONGRUOUS. adj. [incongruus, Fr. in and congruus.]
1. Unfuitable; not fitting.

So inconscient are these common people, and so little feeling have they of God, or their own souls good. Spenser.

INC

INCONSEQUENCE. n. f. [inconsequence, Fr. inconsequencia, Lat.] Inconclusiveness; want of just inference.
This he bestows the name of many fallacies upon; and runs on with shewing the inconsequence of it, as though he did in earnest believe it were an impertinent answer. Stillington.
INCONSEQUENT. adj. [in and consequens, Lat.] Without just conclusion; without regular inference.
The ground he assumes is ungrounded, and his illation from thence deduced inconsequent. Hakewill on Providence.
Men rest not in false apprehensions without absurd and inconsequent deductions from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erecting conclusions no way inferible from their premises. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
INCONSIDERABLE. adj. [in and considerable.] Unworthy of notice; unimportant.
No, I am an inconsiderable fellow, and know nothing. Denham's Sappho.
The most inconsiderable of creatures may at some time or other come to revenge itself upon the greatest. LeEstrange.
Casting my eyes upon the ants, continually taken up with a thousand cares, very inconsiderable with respect to us, but of the greatest importance for them, they appeared to me worthy of my curiosity. Addison.
May not planets and comets perform their motions more freely, and with less resistance, in this ethereal medium than in any fluid, which fills all space adequately without leaving any pores; and by consequence is much denser than quicksilver or gold? And may not its resistance be so small as to be inconsiderable? Newton's Opt.
If we were under any real fear of the papists, it would be hard to think us so stupid not to be equally apprehensive with others, since we are likely to be the greatest sufferers; but we look upon them to be altogether as inconsiderable as the women and children. Swift.
Let no sin appear small or inconsiderable by which an almighty God is offended, and eternal salvation endangered. Rogers.
INCONSIDERABLENESS. n. f. [from inconsiderable.] Small importance.
To those who are thoroughly convinced of the inconsiderableness of this short dying life, in comparison of that eternal state which remains for us in another life, the consideration of a future happiness is the most powerful motive. Tillotson.
From the consideration of our own smallness and inconsiderableness, in respect of the greatness and splendor of those glorious heavenly bodies, let us with the holy psalmist raise up our hearts. Ray on the Creation.
INCONSIDERATE. adj. [inconsideratus, Fr. inconsideratus, Latin.]
1. Careless; thoughtless; negligent; inattentive; inadvertent.
When thy inconsiderate hand
Flings ope this sacrament, with my trembling name,

1. Resting upon; lying upon.
Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,
That felt unusual weight. Milt. Paradise Lost, b. i.
The ascending parcels of air, having now little more than the weight of the incumbent water to surmount, were able both so to expand themselves as to fill up that part of the pipe which they pervaded, and, by pressing every way against the sides of it, to lift upwards with them what water they found above them. Boyle.

INC

- With wings expanded wide ourselves we'll rear,
And fly incumbent on the dusky air. Dryden.
Here the rebel giants lye;
And, when to move th' incumbent load they try,
Ascending vapours on the day prevail. Addisn.
Man is the destin'd prey of pestilence,
And o'er his guilty domes
She draws a close incumbent cloud of death. Thomson.
2. Imposed as a duty.
All men, truly zealous, will perform those good works that are incumbent on all Christians. Sprat's Sermons.
There is a double duty incumbent upon us in the exercise of our powers. L'Estrange.
Thus, if we think and act, we shall shew ourselves duly mindful not only of the advantages we receive from thence, but of the obligations also which are incumbent upon us. Atter.

punishment or reprobation.
I have incurred displeasure from inferiours for giving way to the faults of others. Hayward.
They, not obeying,
Incur'd, what could they less? the penalty;
And manifold in sin, deserv'd to fall. Milton's Par. Lost.
So judge thou still, presumptuous! till the wrath,
Which thou incur'st by flying, meet thy flight
Sev'nfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell. Milton.
They had a full persuasive that not to do it were to desert
God, and consequently to incur damnation. South.
2. To occur; to press on the senses.
The motions of the minute parts of bodies are invisible, and incur not to the eye; but yet they are to be deprehended by experience. Bacon's Natural History.
The mind of man, even in spirituals, acts with corporeal dependance; and so is he helped or hindered in its operations, according to the different quality of external objects that incur into the senses. South's Sermons.
- INCURABILITY.* n. f. [incurabilitas, Fr. from incurable.] Impossibility of cure; utter insusceptibility of remedy.
We'll instantly open a door to the manner of a proper and improper consumption, together with the reason of the incurability of the former, and facile cure of the other. Harvey.
- INCURABLE.* adj. [incurable, Fr. in and curable.] Not admitting remedy; not to be removed by medicine; irremediable;
hopeless.
Pause not; for the present time's so fick,
That present medicine must be ministr'd,
Or overthrow incurable ensues. Shakesp. King John.
Stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable;
For being green, there is great hope of help. Shakesp. H. VI.
A schirrus is not absolutely incurable, because it has been rant. Locke.

- INCURIOS.* adj. [in and curious.] Negligent; inattentive.
The Creator did not bestow so much skill upon his creatures, to be looked upon with a careless incurious eye. Derham.
He seldom at the park appear'd;
Yet, not incurious, was inclin'd
To know the converse of mankind. Swift.
- INCURSION.* n. f. [from incurro, Latin.]
1. Attack; mischievous occurrence.
Sins of daily incurSION, and such as human frailty is unavoidably liable to. South's Sermons.
2. [IncurSION, Fr.] Invasion without conquest; inroad; ravage.
Spain is very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffer'd a small fleet of English to make an hostile invasion, or incurSION, upon their havens and roads. Bacon.
Now the Parthian king hath gather'd all his host Against the Scythian, whose incurSIONS wild
Have wasted Sogdiana. Milton's Par. Regain'd.
The incurSIONS of the Goths disorder'd the affairs of the Roman empire. Arbutnot on Cæsar.
- INCURVATION.* n. f. [from incurvo, Latin.]
1. The act of bending or making crooked.
One part moving while the other rests, one would think, should cause an incurvation in the line. Glauv. See f.
2. Flexion of the body in token of reverence.
He made use of acts of worship which God hath appropriated; as incurvation, and sacrifice. Stillingfleet.

IND

- To INCURVATE. v. a. [incurvo, Latin.] To bend; to crook.
Sir Isaac Newton has shewn, by several experiments of rays passing by the edges of bodies, that they are incurvated by the action of these bodies. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.
- INCURVITY.* n. f. [from incurvus, Latin.] Crookedness; the state of bending inward.
The incurvity of a dolphin must be taken not really, but in appearance, when they leap above water, and suddenly shoot down again: strait bodies, in a sudden motion, protruded obliquely downward, appear crooked. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- To INDAGATE. v. a. [indago, Latin.] To search; to beat out.
INDAGATION. n. f. [from indagate] Search; enquiry; examination.

1. To put into debt.
2. To oblige; to put under obligation.
- INDEBTED.* part. cipal adj. [in and debt.] Obligated by something received; bound to restitution; having incurred a debt. It has to be before the person to whom the debt is due, and for before the thing received.
If the course of politick affairs cannot in any good course go forward without fit instruments, and that which fitteth them be their virtues, let polity acknowledge itself indebted to religion, godliness being the chiefest top and well-spring of all true virtues, even as God is of all good things. Hooker.
Forgive us our sins; for we forgive every one that is indebted to us. Lu. xi. 4.
- He for himself
Indebted and undone, has nought to bring. Milton.
This blest alliance may
Th' indebted nation bounteously repay. Cromwell.
Few consider how much we are indebted to government, because few can represent how wretched mankind would be without it. Atterbury's Sermons.
Let us represent to our souls the love and beneficence for which we daily stand indebted to God. Rogers's Sermons.
We are wholly indebted for them to our ancestors. Swift.
- INDECENCY.* n. f. [indecence, French.] Any thing unbecoming; any thing contrary to good manners; something wrong, but scarce criminal.
He will in vain endeavour to reform indecence in his pupil, which he allows in himself. Locke.
- INDECENT.* adj. [indecent, Fr. in and decent.] Unbecoming; unfit for the eyes or ears.
'Till these men can prove these things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, the use of them, as established amongst us, is necessary. South.
Characters, where obscene words were proper in their mouths, but very indecent to be heard. Dryden.
- INDECENTLY.* adv. [from indecent.] Without decency; in a manner contrary to decency.
INDECIDUOUS. adj. [in and deciduous.] Not falling; not shed.
We find the statue of the sun framed with rays about the head, which were the indeciduous and unshaken locks of Apollo. Brown's Vul. Err.
- INDECLINABLE.* adj. [indeclinable, Fr. indeclinabilis, Latin.]
Not varied by terminations.
Pondo is an indeclinable word, and when it is joined to numbers it signifies libra. Arbutnot.
- INDECOROUS.* adj. [indecorus, Latin.] Indecent; unbecoming.
What can be more indecorous than for a creature to violate the commands, and trample upon the authority of that awful excellence to whom he owes his life? Norris.
- INDECORUM.* n. f. [Latin.] Indecency; something unbecoming.
INDEED. adv. [in and deed.]
1. In reality; in truth; in verity.
Yet loving indeed, and therefore constant.
Though such assemblies be had indeed for religion's sake, hurtful nevertheless they may prove, as well in regard of their fitness to serve the turn of heretics, and such as privily will venture to taint their poison into new minds. Hooker.
Some, who have not deserved judgment of death, have been for their goods sake caught up and carried freight to the bough:
a thing indeed very pitiful and horrible. Spenser.
2. Above

IND

2. Above common rate.

Himself doth in his chamber them debate. Davies.
Such sons of Abraham, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed. South.
- I were a beast, indeed, to do you wrong,
I who have lov'd and honour'd you so long. Dryden.
3. This is to be granted that. A particle of connection.
This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save those the labour who would look for Adam's heir amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery of one next heir amongst men. Locke.
There is nothing in the world more generally dreaded, and yet less to be feared, than death: indeed, for those unhappy men whose hopes terminate in this life, no wonder if the prospect of another seems terrible and amazing. Wake.
4. It is used sometimes as a slight assertion or recapitulation in a sense hardly perceptible or explicable.
This is indeed more criminal in thee. Shakespære.
I said I thought it was confederacy between the juggler and the two servants; tho' indeed I had no reason so to think. Bac.
Some sons indeed, some very few we see,
Who keep themselves from this infection free. Dryden.
There is indeed no greater pleasure in visiting these magazines of war, after one has seen two or three of them. Addis.
5. It is used to note concession in comparisons.
Against these forces were prepared to the number of near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion. Bacon's War with Spain.
- INDEFA'TIGABLE.* adj. [indefatigabilis, in and defatigo, Lat.]
Unwearied; not tired; not exhausted by labour.
Who shall spread his airy flight,
Upborne with indefatigable wings,
Over the vast abrupt. Milton.
The ambitious person must rise early and sit up late, and pursue his design with a constant indefatigable attendance: he must be infinitely patient and servile. South.
- INDEFA'TIGABLY.* adv. [from indefatigable.] Without weariness.
A man indefatigably zealous in the service of the church and state, and whose writings have highly deserved of both. Dryd.

suffering no decay; of being subject to no defect.
INDEFE'CTIBLE. adj. [in and defectus, Lat.] Unfailing; not liable to defect or decay.
INDEFE'ISIBLE. adj. [indefeifibile, French.] Not to be cut off;
not to be vacated; irrevocable.
So indefeifibile is our estate in those joys, that, if we do not sell it in reversion, we shall, when once invested, be beyond the possibility of ill husbandry. Decay of Piety.
- INDEFE'NSIBLE.* adj. [in and defensum, Lat.] What cannot be defended or maintained.
As they extend the rule of consulting Scripture to all the actions of common life, even so far as to the taking up of a sword, so it is altogether false and indefeifensibile. Sanderfon.
- INDEFINITE.* adj. [indefinitus, Latin; indefinit, Fr.]
1. Not determined; not limited; not settled.
Though a position should be wholly rejected, yet that negative is more pregnant of direction than an indefinite; as athes are more generative than dust. Bacon's Essays.
Her advancement was left indefinite; but thus, that it should be as great as ever any former queen of England had. Bacon.
Tragedy and picture are more narrowly circumscribed by place and time than the epic poem: the time of this last is left indefinite. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. Large beyond the comprehension of man, though not absolutely without limits.
Though it is not infinite, it may be indefinite; though it is not boundless in itself, it may be so to human comprehension. Spektor.
- INDEFINITELY.* adv. [from indefinite.]
1. Without any settled or determinate limitation.
We observe that custom, whereunto St. Paul alludeth, and whereof the fathers of the church in their writings make often mention, to shew indefinitely what was done; but not universally to bind for ever all prayers unto one only fashion of utterance. Hooker.
We conceive no more than the letter beareth; that is, four times, or indefinitely more than thrice. Brown's Vulg. Err.
A duty to which all are indefinitely obliged, upon some occasions, by the express command of God. Smalridge.
2. To a degree indefinite.
If the world be indefinitely extended, that is, so far as no human intellect can fancy any bounds of it, then what we see must be the least part. Ray on the Creation.
- INDEFINITUDE.* n. f. [from indefinite.] Quantity not limited by our understanding, though yet finite.
They arise to a strange and prodigious multitude, if not infinite.

which may most fully remove all fears, and bury all jealousies in forgetfulness. King Charles.
- TO INDENT.* v. a. [in and dens, a tooth, Lat.] To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate.
About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlinked itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakespære's As you like,
The serpent then, not with indented wave,
Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze! Milton's Paradise Lost.
Trent, who, like some earth-born giant, spreads
His thirty arms along the indented meads. Milton.
The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented. Woodward.
- TO INDENT.* v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.] To contract; to bargain; to make a compact.
Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears,
When they have lost and forfeited themselves? Shakesp. H. IV.
He descends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant, and has indented with us. Decay of Piety.
- INDE'NT.* n. f. [from the verb.] Inequality; incisure; inden-tation.
Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent,
To rob me of so rich a bottom here. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
- INDENTATION.* n. f. [in and dens, Latin.] An indenture;
waving in any figure.
The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented; each indentation being continued in a small ridge across the line, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin. Woodward on Passils.
- INDENTURE.* n. f. [from indent.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented or cut one by the other.
In Hall's chronicle much good matter is quite marred with indenture English. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
The critic to his grief will find
How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.

INDEPENDENCY. n. f. [independence, Fr. in and dependance.]
Freedom; exemption from reliance or control; state over which none has power.
Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter. Addison's Spectator.
Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

IND

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,
My bread and independency:
So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd just as you see I do.

Pope.

INDEPENDENT. adj. [independant, Fr. in and dependent.]
1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect.

South's Sermons.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republick, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addison.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superior cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance; these alone do very easily guide us to the wife Author of all things. Bentley's Sermons.

INDEPENDENT. n. s. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superior authority.

We shall, in our sermons, take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sander.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison's Spectator.

INDEPENDENTLY. adv. [from independent.] Without reference to other things.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing, independently the one of the other. Dryden.

INDESERT. n. s. [in and desert.] Want of merit.

Those who were once looked on as his equals, are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own indeserts. Addison's Spectator.

INDESINENTLY. adv. [indeseñter, Fr. in and desinio, Latin.] Without cessation.

They continue a month indeseñtly. Ray on the Creation.

INDESTRUCTIBLE. adj. [in and destructible.] Not to be destroyed.

Glass is so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature. Boyle.

INDETERMINABLE. adj. [in and determinable.] Not to be fixed; not to be defined or settled.

There is not only obscurity in the end, but beginning of the world; that as its period is inscrutable, so is its nativity indeterminable. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INDETERMINATE. adj. [indeterminé, Fr. in and determinate.] Unfixed; not defined; indefinite.

The rays of the same colour were by turns transmitted at one thickness, and reflected at another thickness, for an indeterminate number of successions. Newton's Opt.

INDETERMINATELY. adv. [in and determinately.] Indefinitely; not in any settled manner.

His perspicacity discerned the loadstone to respect the North, when ours beheld it indeterminately. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The depth of the hold is indeterminately exprest in the description. Arbuthnot on Coins.

INDETERMINED. adj. [in and determined.] Unsettled; unfixed.

We should not amuse ourselves with floating words of indetermined signification, which we can use in several senses to serve a turn. Locke.

INDETERMINATION. n. s. [in and determination.] Want of determination; want of fixed or stated direction.

By contingents I understand all things which may be done, and may not be done, may happen, or may not happen, by reason of the indetermination or accidental concurrence of the causes. Bramhall against Hobbes.

INDEVOTION. n. s. [indevotion, Fr. in and devotion.] Want of devotion; irreligion.

Let us make the church the scene of our penitence, as of our faults; deprecate our former indevotion, and, by an exemplary reverence, redress the scandal of our profaneness. Decay of Piety.

INDEVOUT. adj. [indevout, Fr. in and devout.] Not devout; not religious; irreligious.

He prays much, yet curses more; whilst he is meek, but indevout. Decay of Piety.

INDEX. n. s. [Latin.]

1. The discoverer; the pointer out.

Tastes are the indexes of the different qualities of plants, as well as of all sorts of aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides. Decay of Piety.

2. The hand that points to any thing, as to the hour or way.

IND

They have no more inward self-consciousness of what they do or suffer, than the index of a watch, of the hour it points to. Bentley's Sermons.

3. The table of contents to a book.

In such indexes, although small To their subsequent volumes, there is seen

The baby figure of the giant mals
Of things to come, at large. Shakespeare.

If a book has no index, or good table of contents, 'tis very useful to make one as you are reading it; and in your index take notice only of parts new to you.

INDEXIBILITY. n. s. [in and dexterity.] Want of dexterity; want of readiness; want of handiness.

The indexibility of our consumption-curers demonstrates their dimness in beholding its causes. Harvey on Consumption.

INDIAN Arrow-root. n. s. [maricanta, Latin.] A root.

It has a flower consisting of one leaf, almost funnel-shaped, opening in six parts, three of which are alternately larger than the others: the lower part of the flower-cup afterwards becomes an oval shaped fruit, having one cell, with one hard rough seed. It was brought from the Spanish settlements of America into the islands of Barbadoes and Jamaica, where it is cultivated as a medicinal plant, it being a sovereign remedy for curing the bite of wasps, and expelling the poison of the manchineel tree. This root the Indians apply to extract the venom of their arrows: after they have dug it up they clean it, mash it, and lay it as a poultice to the wounded part, and are generally successful in the cure. Miller.

INDIAN Cress. n. s. [acrisiola, Latin.] A plant.

The leaves are round, umbilicated, and placed alternately; the stalks trailing; the cup of the flower is quinqued; the flowers consist of five leaves in form of a violet; the seeds are roundish and rough, three of them succeeding each flower. The species are five. Miller.

INDIAN Fig. n. s. [apuntia, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose, having a great number of stamina in the centre, which grow upon the top of the ovary: the ovary afterwards becomes a fleshy umbilicated fruit, with a soft pulp, including many seeds, which are for the most part angular. Miller.

INDIAN Red. n. s. A kind of mineral earth.

Indian red, so called by the painters, is a species of ochre; and is a very fine purple earth, of firm compact texture, and great weight: while in the stratum it is of a pure blood colour, and almost of a stony hardness: when dry it is of a fine glowing red, of a rough dusty surface, and, when broken, full of white particles, large, solid, bright, and glittering. It is also called Persian earth, and is dug in the island of Ormuz in the Persian gulph, and also at Bombay. Hill on Poppis.

INDICANT. adj. [indicans, Latin.] Showing; pointing out; that which directs what is to be done in any disease.

To INDICATE. v. a. [indico, Latin.]

1. To show; to point out.

2. [In physics.] To point out a remedy.

INDICATION. n. s. [indicatio, Fr. indicatio, from indico, Lat.] Mark; token; sign; note; symptom.

The frequent stops they make in the most convenient places, are a plain indication of their weariness. Addison's Guardian.

We think that our successes are a plain indication of the divine favour towards us. Atterbury's Sermon.

2. [In physics.] Indication is of four kinds: vital, preservative, curative, and palliative, as it directs what is to be done to continue life, cutting off the cause of an approaching distemper, curing it whilst it is actually present, or lessening its effects, or taking off some of its symptoms before it can be wholly removed. Quincy.

These be the things that govern nature principally, and without which you cannot make any true analysis, and indication of the proceedings of nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The depravation of the instruments of mastication is a natural indication of a liquid diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Discovery made; intelligence given.

If a person, that had a fair estate in reversion, should be assured by some skilful physician, that he would inevitably fall into a disease that would totally deprive him of his understanding and memory; if, I say, upon a certain belief of this indication, the man should appear overjoyed at the news, would not all that saw him conclude that the distemper had seized him? Bentley's Sermons.

INDICATIVE. adj. [indicativus, Lat.]

1. Showing; informing; pointing out.

2. [In grammar.] A certain modification of a verb, expressing affirmation or indication.

The verb is formed in a certain manner to affirm, deny, or interrogate; which formation, from the principal use of its, is called the indicative mood. Clarke's Lat. Gram.

INDICATIVELY. adv. [from indicative.] In such a manner as shows or betokens.

These images, formed in the brain, are indicatively of the same species with those of sense. Grew's Colours.

To INDICT. See INDITE, and its derivatives.

IND

INDICTION. n. s. [indiction, Fr. indico, Latin.]

1. Declaration; proclamation.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation and indiction of a war, the war is left at large. Bacon.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for sixteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterwards, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, by which an intire freedom was given to Christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which 'till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A. D. 313, Jan. 1.

INDIFFERENCE. n. s. [indifference, French; indifferentia, Latin.]

1. Neutrality; suspension; equipoise or freedom from motives on either side.

In choice of committees it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifference by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bacon's Essays.

By an equal indifference for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true. Locke.

A perfect indifference in the mind, not determinable by its last judgment, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifference to act, or not to act, 'till determined by the will. Locke.

Those who would borrow light from expositors, either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments; or else with indifference look into the notes of all commentators. Locke.

2. Impartiality.

Read the book with indifference and judgment, and thou can't not but greatly commend it. Whiggist.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.

Indifference cannot but be criminal, when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance. Addison.

A place which we must pass through, not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance of those who travel through the country of an enemy. Rogers.

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt? Swift.

He will let you know he has got a clap with as much indifference as he would a piece of publick news. Swift.

The people of England should be fought with the French king and the pretender once a year: the want of observing this necessary precept has produced great indifference in the vulgar. Arbuthnot.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates; state in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond of some higher duty remove the indifference that such things have in themselves: their indifference is removed, if we take away our own liberty. Hooker.

INDIFFERENT. adj. [indifferent, Fr. indifferens, Latin.]

1. Neutral; not determined to either side.

Doth his majesty
Incline to it or no?
—He seems indifferent. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Being indifferent, we should receive and embrace opinions according as evidence gives the attestation of truth. Locke.

Let guilt or fear
Disturb man's rest; Cato knows neither of them:
Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die. Addison's Cato.

2. Unconcerned; inattentive; regardless.

One thing was all to you, and your fondness made you indifferent to every thing else. Temple.

It was a remarkable law of Solon, that any person who, in the civil commotions of the republick, remained neuter, or an indifferent spectator of the contending parties, should be condemned to perpetual banishment. Addison's Prebolder.

But how indifferent sever man may be to eternal happiness, yet surely to eternal misery none can be indifferent. Rogers.

3. Not to have such difference as that the one is for its own sake preferable to the other.

The nature of things indifferent is neither to be commanded nor forbidden, but left free and arbitrary. Hooker.

These two customs, which of themselves are indifferent in other kingdoms, became exceeding evil in this realm, by reason of the inconveniences which followed thereupon. Davies.

Though at first it was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet, the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not for indifference. South.

This I mention only as my conjecture, it being indifferent to the matter in hand which way the learned shall determine. Lee.

4. Impartial; disinterested.

Medcalf was partial to none, but indifferent to all; a master for the whole, and a father to every one. Ascham.

IND

No judge indifferent, and no more assurance
Of equal friendship and proceeding. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

There can hardly be an indifferent trial had between the king and the subject, or between party and party, by reason of this general kindred and consanguinity. Davies.

5. Passable; having mediocrity; of a middling state; neither good nor worst. This is an improper and colloquial use, especially when applied to persons.

Some things admit of mediocrity:
A counsellor, or pleader at the bar,
May want Meffala's pow'ful eloquence,
Or be less read than deep Cassilius;
Yet this indifferent lawyer is esteem'd. Roscommon.

Who would excel, when few can make a test
Betwixt indifferent writing and the best? Dryden.

This has obliged me to publish an indifferent collection of poems, for fear of being thought the author of a worse. Prior.

There is not one of these subjects that would not sell a very indifferent paper, could I think of gratifying the publick by such mean and base methods. Addison.

6. In the same sense it has the force of an adverb.

I am myself indifferent honest; but yet I could accuse me of such things, that it were better that my mother had not borne me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

This will raise a great scum on it, and leave your wine indifferent clear. Mortimer.

INDIFFERENTLY. adv. [indifferenter, Latin.]

1. Without distinction; without preference.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them. Newton's Opt.

Were pardon extended indifferently to all, which of them would think himself under any particular obligation? Addison.

Though a church of England-man thinks every species of government equally lawful, he does not think them equally expedient, or for every country indifferently. Swift.

2. In a neutral state; without wish or aversion.

Set honour in one eye, and death i' th' other,
And I will look on death indifferently. Shakespeare's Jul. Cæs.

INDISTINCTNESS. n. f. [from indistinct.] Confusion; uncertainty; obscurity.

There is unevenness or indistinctness in the style of these places, concerning the origin and form of the earth. Burnet.

Old age makes the cornea and coat of the crystalline humour grow flatter than before; so that the light, for want of a sufficient refraction, will not converge to the bottom of the eye, but beyond it, and by consequence paint in the bottom of the eye a confused picture; and according to the indistinctness of this picture, the object will appear confused. Newton.

INDISTURBANCE. n. f. [in and disturb.] Calmness; freedom from disturbance.

What is called by the stoicks apathy, and by the scepticks indisturbance, seems all but to mean great tranquillity of mind. Temple.

INDIVIDUAL. adj. [individu, individuel, Fr. individuum, Lat.]

1. Separate from others of the same species; single; numerically one.
Neither is it enough to consult, secundum genera, what the kind and character of the person should be; for the most judgment is shown in the choice of individuals. Bacon.

They present us with images more perfect than the life in any individual. Dryden's Dufresny.

Must the whole man, amazing thought! return
To the cold marble, or contracted urn?
And never shall those particles agree,
That were in life this individual he? Prior.

12 F

Know

IND

Know all the good that individuals find,
Lie in three words, health, peace and competence. Pope.
We see each circumstance of art and individual of nature summoned together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination.
Pope's Preface to the Iliad.
It would be wife in them, as individual and private mortals, to look back a little upon the storms they have raised, as well as those they have escaped. Swift.
The object of any particular idea is called an individual; so
Peter is an individual man, London an individual city. Watts.
2. Undivided; not to be parted or disjointed.
To give thee being, I lent
Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,
Substantial life, to have thee by my side
Henceforth an individual solace dear. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Long eternity shall greet our bliss
With an individual kiss. Milton.
Under his great vicegerent reign abide United, as one individual soul,
For ever happy. Milt. Parad. Lost, b. v.
INDIVIDUALITY. n. f. [from individual.] Separate or distinct existence.
Crambe would tell his instructor, that all men were not singular;
that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man;
for it was commonly said that a man is not the same he was, and that mad men are beside themselves. Arbutnot.
INDIVIDUALLY. adv. [from individual.] With separate or distinct existence; numerically.
How should that subsist solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it. Hooker.
I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance. Hakewell on Providence.
TO INDIVIDUATE. v. a. [from individuum, Latin.] To distinguish from others of the same species; to make single.
Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure. More against Atheism.
No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his author's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thoughts and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and indivuate him from all other writers. Dryden.
INDIVIDUATION. n. f. [from individue.] That which makes an individual.
What is the principle of individuation? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before? Watts.
INDIVIDUITY. n. f. [from individuum, Latin.] The state of being an individual; separate existence.
INDIVINITY. n. f. [in and divinity.] Want of divine power.
Not in use.
How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Creesus, who being ruined by his amphibology, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
INDIVISIBILITY. n. f. [from indivisible.] State in which no
INDIVISIBLENESS. n. f. more division can be made.
A pebble and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician.
Locke.
INDIVISIBLE. adj. [from indivisible, Fr. in and divisible.] What cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller;
having reached the last degree of divisibility.
By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies. Digby.
Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
INDIVISIBLY. adv. [from indivisible.] So as it cannot be divided.
INDOCIBLE. adj. [in and docible.] Unteachable; insusceptible of instruction.
INDOCIL. adj. [from indocilis, Fr. indocile, Latin.] Unteachable; incapable of being instructed.
These certainly are the fools in the text, indocil, intractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and is proof against demonstration itself. Bentley's Sermons.
INDOCILITY. n. f. [from indocilis, Fr. in and docilis.] Unteachableness; refusal of instruction.
TO INDOCTRINATE. v. a. [from indocetrinere, old French.] To instruct;
to tincture with any science, or opinion.

delight in indoctrinating his young inexperienced favourite, Buckingham had obtained a quick conception of speaking very gracefully and pertinently. Clarendon.
They that never peep beyond the common belief, in which their easy understandings were at first indoctrinated, are strongly assured of the truth and co-operative excellency of their receptions. Glanv. Sceps.
INDOCTRINATION. n. f. [from indoctrinare.] Instruction; information.

IND

Although postulates are very accommodable unto junior indoctrinations, yet are these authorities but temporary, and not to be embraced beyond the minority of our intellectuals. Bra.
INDOLENCE. n. f. [in and dolere, Latin; indolence, French.]
1. Freedom from pain.
As there must be indolence where there is happiness, so there must not be indigency. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. Laziness; inattention; listlessness.
Let Epicurus give indolence as an attribute to his gods, and place in it the happiness of the blest: the divinity which we worship has given us not only a precept against it, but his own example to the contrary. Dryden.
The Spanish nation, roused from their ancient indolence and ignorance, seem now to improve trade. Belingrove.
INDOLENT. adj. [French.]

confidence in those antipathetical spirits. Harvey.
INDUBITABLE. adj. [from indubitabilis, Lat. indubitabile, Fr. in and dubitabile.] Undoubted; unquestionable.
When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
INDUBITABLY. adv. [from indubitabile.] Undoubtedly; unquestionably.
If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, there will indubitably result from either a graceful and harmonious contentment. Watson's Architecture.
The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities.
Spratt's Sermons.
I appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be only a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indubitably must proceed from a spiritual substance. Bentley's Sermons.
INDUITATE. adj. [from induitatus, Latin.] Unquestioned; certain;
apparent; evident.
If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the dishonour of the line of York, held then the indubitate heirs of the crown.
Bacon's Henry VII.
I have been tempted to wonder how, among the jealousies of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitate heir of the Saxon line. Watson.
TO INDUCE. v. a. [from inducere, Fr. induco, Latin.]
1. To persuade; to influence to any thing.
The self-same argument in this kind, which doth but induce the vulgar sort to like, may constrain the wiser to yield. Hook.
This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments both of nature and education, yet would the never be induced to entertain marriage with any. Hayward.
Desire with thee still longer to converse Induc'd me. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.
Let not the covetous design of growing rich induce you to ruin your reputation, but rather satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
2. To produce by persuasion or influence.
Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive apace to exceed our pattern. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
As this belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Forbes.
3. To offer by way of induction, or consequential reasoning.
They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people, and take up popular conceits. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person

IND

person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people. Temple.
5. To cause extrinsically; to produce.
Sour things induce a contraction in the nerves, placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite. Bacon.
Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids, but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities. Arbutnot on Aliments.
6. To introduce; to bring into view.
To exprobrate their stupidity, he induceth the providence of flocks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.
The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs. Pope.
7. To bring on; to superinduce.
Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.
INDUCEMENT. n. f. [from induce.] Motive to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.
The former inducements, do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath ministered farther reason. Hooker.
Many inducements, besides Scripture, may lead me to that, which if Scripture be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade.
That mov'd me to, Shakef. Henry VIII.
Then mark th' inducement.
He lives
Higher degree of life; inducement strong
For us. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix.
My inducement hither,
Was not at present here to find my son. Milton's Agonist.
Instances occur of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors. Rogers.

benefice, it shall make the first void. Ayliffe's Paragon.
INDUCTION. n. f. [from inductio, Fr. induction, Latin.]
1. Introduction; entrance.
These promises are fair, the parties sure,
And our induction full of prosperous hope. Shakef. Hen. IV.
2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelations;
therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts's Logic.
The inquiry by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon's Natural History.
Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration:
conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.
Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general; and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton's Opt.
He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.
3. The act or state of taking possession of an ecclesiastical living.
INDUCTIVE. adj. [from inductus.]

A brutish vice,
Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milt. Par. Lost.
2. Capable to infer or produce.
Abatements may take away infallible conclusiveness in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
TO INDUE. v. a. [from indue, Latin.]
1. To invest.
One first matter all,
Indue'd with various forms. Milton's Paradise Lost.
2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with indue or indue, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence.
The angel, by whom God indued the waters of Bethesda with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters. Hooker.
His powers, with dreadful strength indue'd,
She, with her fair hand, still'd into the nostrils of his friend.
Chapman's Iliads.
TO INDULGE. v. a. [from indulgeo, Latin.]
1. To fondle; to favour; to gratify with concession; to foster.
The lazy glutton fate at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryd. Pers.

IND

A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. L. che.
To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Atterbury.
2. To grant not of right, but favour.
Ancient privileges, indulged by former kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors.
Taylor's Rule of living holy.
The virgin entering bright, indulge'd the day
To the brown cave, and brush'd the dreams away. Dryden.
This is what nature's want may well suffice;
But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fate,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryd. Favo.
My friend, indulge one labour more,
And seek Atrides. Pope's Odyssey.
Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night! Daniciads.
TO INDULGE. v. n. [A Latinism not in use.] To be favourable; to give indulgence. With to.
He must, by indulging to any one sort of reprovable discourse himself, defeat all his endeavours against the rest. Government of the Tongue.
INDULGENCE. n. f. [from indulgeo, Fr. from indulgeo.]
INDULGENCY. n. f. fond kindness.
1. Fondness; fond kindness.
Restraint she will not brook;
And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,
She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milt. Parad. Lost.
The glories of our life,
Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,
Expect the warm indulgency of heaven. Dryd. K. Arthur.
2. Forbearance; tenderness; opposite to rigour.
They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less.
Hammond on Fundamentals.
In known images of life, I guess
The labour greater, as th' indulgence less. Pope.
3. Favour granted.
If all these gracious indulgences are without any effect on us,
we must perish in our own folly. Rogers.
4. Grant of the church of Rome, not defined by themselves.
Thou, that giv'st whored indulgences to sin,
I'll canvas thee. Shakefpeare's Henry VI.
Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,
The sport of winds. Milton.
In purgatory, indulgences, and supererogation, the assertors seem to be unanimous in nothing but in reference to profit. Decay of Piety.
Leo X. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences. Atterbury.
INDULGENT. adj. [from indulgent, Fr. indulgent, Latin.]

INDUSTRIOUSLY. adv. [from industrious.] Diligently; laboriously; assiduously.

If industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Some friends to vice industriously defend
These innocent diversions, and pretend
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dryden's Juven.

2. For the set purpose; with design.
Great Britain was never before united in itself under one king, notwithstanding that the uniting had been industriously attempted both by war and peace. Bacon.

I am not under the necessity of declaring myself, and I industriously conceal my name, which wholly exempts me from any hopes and fears. Swift.

INDUSTRY. n. f. [from industrie, Fr. industria, Lat.] Diligence; assiduity.

The sweat of industry would dry and die,
But for the end it works to. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

For little drops of honey flee,
And there with humble sweets content her industry. Cowley.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers. More's Antid.

To INEBRIATE. v. a. [from inebrio, Lat.] To intoxicate; to make drunk.

Wine sugared inebriates less than wine pure: fops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriates more than wine of itself. Bac.

Fish, entering far in and meeting with the fresh water, as if inebriated, turn up their bellies and are taken. Sandys.

To INEBRIATE. v. n. To grow drunk; to be intoxicated.

At Constantinople fish, that come from the Euxine sea into the fresh water, do inebriate and turn up their bellies, so as you may take them with your hand. Bacon's Natural Hist.

INEBRIATION. n. f. [from inebriate.] Drunkenness; intoxication.

That cornelians and bloodstones may be of virtue to those intentions they are applied, experience will make us grant; but not that an amethyst prevents inebriation. Brewin.

INEFFABILITY. n. f. [from ineffable.] Unpeakableness.

INEFFABLE. adj. [from ineffable, Fr. ineffabilis, Lat.] Unpeakable; unutterable; not to be expressed. It is used almost always in a good sense.

To whom the son, with calm aspect, and clear,
Lightning divine, ineffable, serene!
Made answer. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. v.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitted conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. South.

INEFFABLY. adv. [from ineffable.] In a manner not to be expressed.

He all his father full express'd,
Ineffably in his face receiv'd. Milton.

INEFFECTIVE. adj. [from ineffectus, Fr. in and effectus.] That which can produce no effect.

As the body, without blood, is a dead and lifeless trunk; so is the word of God, without the spirit, a dead and ineffective letter. Taylor.

He that assures himself he never errs, will always err; and his presumptions will render all attempts to inform him ineffective. Glavin. Scops.

INEFFECTUAL. adj. [from ineffectual.] Unable to produce its proper effect; weak; without power.

The public reading of the Apocrypha they condemn as a thing effectual unto evil: the bare reading even of Scriptures themselves they mislike, as a thing ineffectual to do good. Hook.

The death of Patroclus, joined to the offer of Agamemnon, which of itself had proved ineffectual. Pope.

INEFFECTUALLY. adv. [from ineffectual.] Without effect.

INEFFECTUALNESS. n. f. [from ineffectual.] Inefficacy; want of power to perform the proper effect.

St. James speaks of the ineffectualness of some mens devotion, Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss. Wake.

INEFFECTUOUS. adj. [from ineffectus, Fr. inefficax, Lat.] Unable to produce effects; weak; feeble.

Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and, by frequent use of it, misapply and render inefficacious this useful remedy? Locke.

INEFFICACY. n. f. [from inefficacia, Latin.] Want of power; want of effect.

INELEGANCE. n. f. [from inelegans.] Absence of beauty; want of elegance.

INELEGANT. adj. [from inelegans, Lat.]

1. Not becoming; not beautiful: opposite to elegant.

What order, so contriv'd as not to mix
Tastes, not well join'd, inelegant, but bring Taste after taste, upheld with kindest change. Milton.

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, which is here reputed to inelegant and unbecoming, is indeed extremely charming and agreeable. Woodward.

2. Mean; despicable; contemptible.

Modern critics, having never read Homer, but in low and inelegant translations, impute the meanness of the translation to the poet. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

INELOQUENT. adj. [from ineloquent, Latin.] Not persuasive; not oratorical: opposite to eloquent.

INEPT. adj. [from ineptus, Lat.] Unfit; useless; trifling; foolish.

The works of nature, being neither useless nor inept, must be guided by some principle of knowledge. More.

After their various unsuccessful ways,
Their fruitless labour, and inept essays,
No cause of these appearances they'll find,
But power exerted by th' Eternal Mind. Blackmore.

When the upper and vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile matter, such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

INEPTLY. adv. [from ineptus, Latin.] Triflingly; foolishly; unfitly.

None of them are made foolishly or ineptly. More.

All things were at first disposed by an omniscient intellect, that cannot contrive ineptly. Glavin. Scops.

INEPTITUDE. n. f. [from ineptus, Lat.] Unfitness.

The grating and rubbing of axes against the sockets, wherein they are placed, will cause some ineptitude or resistency to rotation of the cylinder. Wilkins.

An omnipotent agent works infallibly and irresistibly, no ineptitude or stubbornness of the matter being ever able to hinder him. Ray on the Creation.

There is an ineptitude to motion from too great laxity, and an ineptitude to motion from too great tension. Arbutnot.

INEQUALITY. n. f. [from inequalitas, Fr. from in and equalitas, Lat.]

1. Difference of comparative quantity.

There is so great an inequality in the length of our legs and arms, as makes it impossible for us to walk on all four. Ray.

2. Unevenness; interchange of higher and lower parts.

The country is cut into so many hills and inequalities as renders it defensible. Addison on Italy.

The glass seemed as well wrought as the object-glasses use to be; yet when it was quicksilvered, the reflexion discovered innumerable inequalities all over the glass. Newton's Opt.

If there were no inequalities in the surface of the earth, nor in the seasons of the year, we should lose a considerable share of the vegetable kingdom. Bentley.

3. Disproportion to any office or purpose; state of not being adequate; inadequateness.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he proposed in the expectation. South's Sermons.

4. Change of state; unlikeness of a thing to itself; difference of temper or quality.

In some places, by the nature of the earth, and by the situation of woods and hills, the air is more unequal than in others; and inequality of air is ever an enemy to health. Bacon.

5. Difference of rank or station.

If so small inequality between man and man make in them modesty a commendable virtue, who respecting superiors as modesty, can neither speak nor stand before them without fear. Hooker.

INERRABILITY. n. f. [from inerrabile.] Exemption from error; infallibility.

I cannot allow their wisdom such a completeness and inerrability as to exclude myself from judging. King Charles.

INERRABLE. adj. [from inerrabilis, Lat.] Exempt from error.

We have conviction from reason, or decisions from the inerrable and requisite conditions of sense. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Infallibility and inerrability is assumed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond.

INERRABLENESS. n. f. [from inerrabile.] Exemption from error.

Infallibility and inerrability is assumed and inclosed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on. Hammond on Fundamentals.

INERRABLY. adv. [from inerrabile.] With security from error; infallibly.

INERRINGLY.

INE

INERRINGLY. adv. [from inerring.] Without error; without mistake; without deviation.

That divers limners at a distance, without copy, should draw the same picture, is more conceivable, than that matter should frame itself so inerringly according to the idea of its kind. Glavin. Scops.

INERT. adj. [from inertus, Lat.] Dull; sluggish; motionless.

Body alone, inert and brute, you'll find;
The cause of all things is by you assign'd. Blackmore.

Without whose quickening glance their cumbrous orbs
Were brute unlively mass, inert and dead. Thomson.

INERTLY. adv. [from inertus.] Sluggishly; dully.

Ye powers,
Suspend a while your force inertly strong. Dunciad.

INESCATION. n. f. [from inescat, Lat.] The act of baiting.

INESTIMABLE. adj. [from inestimabilis, Lat.] Too valuable to be rated; transcending all price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks,
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl, Inestimable stones, unvalu'd jewels. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

The pope thereupon took advantage, abusing the simplicity of the king to suck out inestimable fums of money, to the intolerable grievance of both the clergy and temporality. Abbot.

There we shall see a sight worthy dying for, that blessed Saviour, of whom the Scripture does so excellently entertain us, and who does so highly deserve of us upon the score of his infinite perfections, and his inestimable benefits. Boyle.

And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize,
On that rapacious hand for ever blaze! Pope.

INEVIDENT. adj. [from inevidens, Fr. in and evidens.] Not plain; obscure. Not in use.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, and a stable assent unto things inevidens, upon authority of the divine revealer. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

INEVITABILITY. n. f. [from inevitabilis.] Impossibility to be avoided; certainty.

By liberty, I do understand neither a liberty from sin, misery, servitude, nor violence, but from necessity, or rather necessity; that is, an universal immunity from all inevitability and determination to one. Bramb. against Hobbs.

INEVITABLE. adj. [from inevitabilis, Fr. inevitable, Lat.] Unavoidable; not to be escaped.

I had a palf with him: he gives me the fluck in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Fate inevitable

Subdues us. Milton.

Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailing pity show. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

INEVITABLY. adv. [from inevitabilis.] Without possibility of escape.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die. Milton's Par. Lost.

How inevitably does an immoderate laughter end in a sigh? South's Sermons.

To look no further than the next line, it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point. Dryden.

Inflammations of the bowels oft inevitably tend to the ruin of the whole. Harvey on Consumptions.

If our sense of hearing were exalted, we should have no quiet or sleep in the silentest nights, and we must inevitably be stricken deaf or dead with a clap of thunder. Bentley.

INEXCUSABLE. adj. [from inexcusabilis, Fr. inexcusable, Lat. in and excusabile.] Not to be excused; not to be palliated by apology.

It is a temerity, and a folly inexcusable, to deliver up ourselves needlessly into another's power. L'Esrange.

As we are an island with ports and navigable seas, we should be inexcusable if we did not make these blessings turn to account. Addison's Freeholder.

Such a favour could only render them more obdurate, and more inexcusable: it would enhance their guilt. Atterbury.

If learning be not encouraged under your administration, you are the most inexcusable person alive. Swift.

A fallen woman is the more inexcusable, as, from the cradle, the sex is warned against the delusions of men. Clarissa.

INEXCUSABLENESS. n. f. [from inexcusabilis.] Enormity beyond forgiveness or palliation.

Their *inexcusable*ness is stated upon the supposition that they knew God, but did not glorify him. South's Sermons.

INEXCUSABLY. adv. [from inexcusabilis.] To a degree of guilt or folly beyond excuse.

It will inexcusably condemn some men, who having received excellent endowments, yet have frustrated the intention. Brown.

INEXHAUSTIBLE. adj. [from inexhaustibilis, Lat.] That which cannot evaporate.

A new laid egg will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhaustible parts into confluence. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

INEXHAUSTED. adj. [from inexhaustibilis.] Unemptied; not possible to be emptied.

INE

So wert thou born into a tuneful strain,
An early, rich, and inexhaustible vein. Dryden.

INEXHAUSTIBLE. adj. [from inexhaustibilis, Lat.] Not to be drawn all away; not to be spent.

Reflect on the variety of combinations which may be made with number, whose stock is inexhaustible, and truly infinite. Locke.

The stock that the mind has in its power, by varying the idea of space, is perfectly inexhaustible, and so it can multiply figures in infinitum. Locke.

INEXISTENT. adj. [from inexistent, Lat.] Not having being; not to be found in nature.

To express complexed significations they took a liberty to compound and piece together creatures of allowable forms into mixtures inexistent. Brown's Vulg. Err.

We doubt whether these heterogeneities be so much as inexistent in the concrete, whence they are obtained. Boyle.

INEXISTENCE. n. f. [from inexistent.] Want of being; want of existence.

He calls up the heroes of former ages from a state of inexistence to adorn and diversify his poem. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

INEXORABLE. adj. [from inexorabilis, Fr. inexorable, Lat.] Not to be intreated; not to be moved by intreaty.

You are more inhuman, more inexorable,
Oh ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania. Shakespeare's H.V.

Inexorable dog. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

The scourge
Inexorable calls to penance. Milton.

The guests invited came,
And with the rest th' inexorable dame. Dryden.

Th' inexorable gates were barr'd,
And nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams, shrieks of woe. Pope's St. Cecilia.

We can be deaf to the words of so sweet a charmer, and inexorable to all his invitations. Rogers.

INEXPEDIENCE. n. f. [from inexpedient, Fr. in and expedient.] Want of fitness; want of propriety; unsuitableness to time or place; inconvenience.

It concerneth superiors to look well to the expediency and inexpedience of what they enjoin in different things. Sanderson.

INEXPEDIENT. adj. [from inexpedient.] Inconvenient; unfit; improper; unsuitable to time or place.

It is not inexpedient they should be known to come from a person altogether a stranger to chymical affairs. Boyle.

We should be prepared not only with patience to bear, but to receive with thankfulness a repulse, if God should see them to be inexpedient. Smallridge's Sermons.

INEXPERIENCE. n. f. [from inexperientia, Fr. in and experience.] Want of experimental knowledge; want of experience.

Thy words at random argue thine inexperience. Milton.

Prejudice and self-sufficiency naturally proceed from inexperience of the world, and ignorance of mankind. Addison.

INEXPERIENCED. adj. [from inexperientia.] Not experienced.

INEXPERT. adj. [from inexpertus, Lat. in and expert.] Unskilful; unskilled.

INEXPLICABLE. adj. [from inexplicabilis, Fr. in and explicare, Lat.] Incapable of being explained; not to be made intelligible.

What could such apprehensions breed, but, as their nature is, inexplicable passions of mind, desires abhorring what they embrace, and embracing what they abhor? Hooker.

To me at least this seems inexplicable, if light be nothing else than precession or motion propagated through ether. Newton.

None eludes sagacious reason more,
Than this obscure inexplicable power. Blackmore.

INF

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of human nature, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs, and groan his pains, to sing his joys, and do and feel every thing by sympathy and secret inexpressible communications.

The true God had no certain name given to him; for Father, and God, and Creator, are but titles arising from his works; and God is not a name, but a notion ingrafted in human nature of an inexpressible being.

There is an inimitable grace in Virgil's words; and in them principally consists that beauty, which gives to inexpressible a pleasure to him who best understands their force: this diction of his is never to be copied.

Dryden.

INEXPRESSIBLY. adv. [from inexpressible.] To a degree or in a manner not to be uttered; unutterably.

God will protect and reward all his faithful servants in a manner and measure inexpressibly abundant.

He began to play upon it: the sound was exceeding sweet, and wrought into a variety of tunes that were inexpressibly melodious.

Addison's Spectator.

INEXPU'GNABLE. adj. [inexpugnabile, Fr. inexpugnabilis, Lat.] Impregnable; not to be taken by assault; not to be subdued.

Why should there be implanted in each sex such a vehement and inexpugnable appetite of copulation? Ray on the Creation.

INEXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [inextinguibile, Fr. in and extingue, Lat.] Unquenchable.

Pillars, statues, and other memorials, are a sort of shadow of an endless life, and show an inextinguishable desire which all men have of it.

Grew's Cymol.

INEXTRICABLE. adj. [inextricable, Fr. inextricabilis, Lat.] Not to be disentangled; not to be cleared; not to be set free from obscurity or perplexity.

He that should tie inextricable knots, only to baffle the industry of those that should attempt to unloose them, would be thought not to have served his generation.

Decay of Piety.

Stopt by awful heights, and gulphs immense
Of wisdom, and of vast omnipotence,
She trembling stands, and does in wonder gaze,
Lost in the wild inextricable maze.

Blackmore.

INEXTRICABLY. adv. [from inextricable.] To a degree of perplexity not to be disentangled.

The mechanical atheist, though you grant him his laws of mechanism, is nevertheless inextricably puzzled and baffled with the first formation of animals.

Bentley's Sermons.

In vain they strive; th' intangling snares deny,
Inextricably firm, the power to fly.

Pope's Odyssey.

TO INEYE. v. n. [in and eye.] To inoculate; to propagate trees by the infusion of a bud into a foreign stock.

Let sage experience teach thee all the arts
Of grafting and ineying.

Phillips.

INFALLIBILITY. n. f. [infallibilit  , Fr. from infallible.] INFALLIBLENESS. n. f. [errability; exemption from error.]

Infallibility is the highest perfection of the knowing faculty, and consequently the firmest degree of assent.

Yillotson.

INFALLIBLE. adj. [infallible, Fr. in and fallible.] Privileged from error; incapable of mistake; not to be misled or deceived; certain.

Every cause admitteth not such infallible evidence of proof, as leaveth no possibility of doubt or scruple behind it.

Hooker.

Believe my words;
For they are certain and infallible, and none ever yet mis-carried in the attempt.

Shaksp. Henry VI.

INFALLIBLY. adv. [from infallible.]

1. Without danger of deceit; with security from error.
We cannot be as God infallibly knowing good and evil.

Smalridge's Sermons.

2. Certainly.

Our blessed Lord has distinctly opened the scene of futurity to us, and directed us to such a conduct as will infallibly render us happy in it.

Rogers's Sermons.

TO INFAME. v. a. [infamer, Fr. infame, Lat.] To represent to disadvantage; to defame; to censure publicly; to make infamous; to brand.

Livia is infamed for the poisoning of her husband.

Bacon.

Hitherto obscur'd, infam'd,
And thy fair fruit let hang, as to no end Created.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

INFAMOUS. adj. [infam  , infamant, Fr. infamis, Lat.] Publicly branded with guilt; openly censured; of bad nature.

Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee, which art infamous.

Ezek. xxii. 5.

These are as some infamous bawd or whore
Should praise a matron; what could hurt her more.

B. Johnson.

After times will dispute it, whether Hotham were more infamous at Hull or at Tower-hill.

King Charles.

Persons infamous, or branded with any note of infamy in any public court of judicature, are, ipso jure, forbidden to be advocates.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

INFAMOUSLY. adv. [from infamous.]

1. With open reproach; with publick notoriety of reproach.

INF

2. Shamefully; scandalously.

That poem was infamously bad.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

INFAMOUSNESS. n. f. [infamie, Fr. infamia, Lat.] Publick reproach; notoriety of bad character.

INFAMY. n. f. [reproach; notoriety of bad character.]

Ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are the infamy of the people.

Ezek. xxxvii. 3.

I throw my infamy at thee:
I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster.

Shaksp. Henry VI.

The noble ille doth want her proper limbs,
Her face deac'd with scars of infamy.

Shaksp. Rich. III.

Wilful perpetrations of unworthy actions brand, with most indelible characters of infamy, the name and memory to posterity.

King Charles.

INFANCY. n. f. [infantia, Latin.]

1. The first part of life. Usually extended by naturalists to seven years.

Dare we affirm it was ever his meaning, that unto their salvation, who even from their tender infancy never knew any other faith or religion than only Christian, no kind of teaching can be available, saving that which was so needful for the first universal conversion of Gentiles, hating Christianity? Hooker.

Pirithous came t' attend
This worthy Theclus, his familiar friend:
Their love in early infancy began,
And rose as childhood ripen'd into man.

Dryden.

The insensible impressions on our tender infancies have very important and lasting consequences.

Locke.

2. Civil infancy, extended by the English law to one and twenty years.

3. First age of any thing; beginning; original; commencement.

In Spain our springs, like old mens children, be Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy.

Dryden's Ind. Emp.

The difference between the riches of Roman citizens in the infancy and in the grandeur of Rome, will appear by comparing the first valuation of estates with the estates afterwards possessed.

Arbutnot on Coins.

INFANGTHEF, or hingsfangtheft, or infangtheft, is compounded of three Saxon words: the preposition, in, fang, or fong, to take or catch, and thef. It signifies a privilege or liberty granted unto lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee.

Covel.

INFANT. n. f. [infans, French; infans, Lat.]

1. A child from the birth to the end of the seventh year.

It being a part of their virtuous education, serveth greatly both to nourish in them the fear of God, and to put us in continual remembrance of that powerful grace, which openeth the mouths of infants to sound his praise.

Hooker.

Within the infant rind of this small flower
Poison hath refuge, and medicine power.

Shaksp.peare.

There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days.

J. lxv. 20.

First the thrill sound of a small rural pipe,
Was entertainment for the infant stage.

Roscommon.

Young mothers wildly stare, with fear possess'd,
And strain their helpless infants to their breast.

Dryden's En.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves and lift their infant head, Indulge their childhood.

Dryden's Virg. Georg.

2. [In law.] A young person to the age of one and twenty.

INFANTIA. n. f. [Spanish.] A prince's descended from the royal blood of Spain.

The fly lies all the Winter in these balls in its infantile state, and comes not to its maturity 'till the following Spring.

Derb.

INFANTRY. n. f. [infanterie, French.] The foot soldiers of an army.

The principal strength of an army consisteth in the infantry or foot; and to make good infantry it requireth men bred in some free and plentiful manner.

Bacon's Henry VII.

That small infantry,
Warr'd on by cranes.

Milton.

INFARTION. n. f. [in and furcio, Lat.] Stuffing; constitution.

An hypocondriack consumption is occasioned by an infartion and obstruction of the spleen.

Harvey.

TO INFATUATE. v. a. [infatus, from in and fatuus, Lat.] INFATUATE. n. f. To strike with folly; to deprive of understanding.

The judgment of God will be very visible in infatuating a people, as ripe and prepared for destruction, into folly and madness, making the weak to contribute to the designs of the wicked; and suffering even those, out of a conscience of their guilt, to grow more wicked.

Clarendon.

It is the reforming of the vices and sottishness that had long overpread the infatuated, gentile world; a prime branch of that design of Christ's sending his disciples.

Hammond.

INF

The people are so universally infatuated with the notion, that, if a cow falls sick, it is ten to one but an old woman is clapt up in prison for it.

Addison on Italy.

The carriage of our atheists or deists is amazing: no dotage so infatuate, no phrensy so extravagant as theirs.

Bentley.

May hypocrites,
That sily speak one thing, another think,
Drink on unwarn'd, 'till, by enchanting cups
Infatuate, they their wily thoughts disclose.

Phillips.

INFATUATION. n. f. [from infatuate.] The act of striking with folly; deprivation of reason.

Where men give themselves over to the defence of wicked interests and false propositions, it is just with God to smite the greatest abilities with the greatest infatuations.

South's Sermon.

INFATUING. n. f. [from infatuus, Lat.] The act of making unlucky. An odd and inelegant word.

As the king did in some part remove the envy from himself, so he did not observe that he did withal bring a kind of malediction and infatuating upon the marriage, as an ill prognostick.

Bacon's Henry VII.

INFATIGABLE. adj. [in and fatigable.] Impracticable.

This is so difficult and infatigable, that it may well drive modesty to despair of science.

Glanv. Scept.

TO INFECT. v. a. [infester, French; infestus, Lat.]

1. To act upon by contagion; to affect with communicated qualities; to hurt by contagion; to taint; to poison; to pollute.

They put such words in the mouths of one of those fantastical mind infected people, that children and musicians call lovers.

Sidney.

Thine eyes, sweet lady, have infected mine.

Shak. R. III.

The nature of bad news infests the teller.

Shaksp.peare.

Every day
It would infest his speech, that if the king Should without issue die, he'd carry it to
To make the scepter his.

Shaksp.peare's Henry VIII.

Infested minds
To their deaf pillows will discharge their secrets.

Shaksp.peare.

She speaks poniards, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her; she would infest to the north-star.

Shaksp.peare.

I am return'd your soldier;
No more infested with my country's love,
Than when I parted hence.

Shaksp. Coriolanus.

The love-tale
Infested Sion's daughters with like heat,
Whose wanton passions in the sacred porch
Ezekiel saw.

Milton.

2. To fill with something hurtfully contagious.

Infested be the air whereon they ride,
And damn'd all those that trust them!

Shaksp. Macbeth.

INFECTION. n. f. [infection, Fr. infectio, Lat.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from disordered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion the same disorders as in the bodies they came from.

Quincy.

What a strange infection
Is fall'n into thy ear!

Shaksp. Cymbeline.

The blessed gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilst you
Do climate here.

Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Vouchsafe, diffus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy cursed self.

Shaksp. R. III.

Hence,
Left that th' infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee.

Shaksp.peare's King Lear.

The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal; but withal there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all.

Bacon's Natural History.

INFECTIOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee!

Shaksp.peare.

In a house,
Where the infectious pestilence did reign.

Shaksp.peare.

Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilences and lippitudes.

Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operation of some poisons, that are received only by the smell.

Temple.

INFECTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.] Contagiously.

The will does, that is inclinable
To what infectiously itself affects.

Shaksp. Troil. and Cressida.

INFECTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious; contagiousness.

INF

INFECTIVE. adj. [from infect.] Having the quality of contagion.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power.

Sidney.

INFECUND. n. f. [infecundus, Lat.] Unfruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

INFECUNDITY. n. f. [infecunditas, Lat.] Want of fertility; barrenness.

INFELICITY. n. f. [infelicit  , Fr. infelicitas, Lat.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy.

Glanv. Scept. c. i.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea.

Watts.

TO INFERR. v. a. [inferre, French; inferre, Lat.]

1. To bring on; to induce.

Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs.

Harvey.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition.

Locke.

Yet what thou can't attain, which best may serve
To glorify the Maker, and infer
Thee also happier, shall not be withheld Thy hearing.

Milton's Par. Lost, b. vii.

Great,
Or bright, inferre not excellence: the earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glittering, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.

Milton.

One would wonder how, from so differing premises, they should all infer the same conclusion.

Decay of Piety.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing publick esteem, by deserv'ing well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations.

Atterbury.

3. To offer; to produce.

Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator,
Inferre arguments of mighty force.

Shaksp. Hen. VI.

INFERENCE. n. f. [inference, French, from inferre.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference.

Glanv.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument.

Watts.

INFERRIBLE. adj. [from inferre.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferrible from their premises.

Brown.

INFERRIORITY. n. f. [inferiorit  , Fr. from inferior.] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiority which is not possibly to be remedied.

Dryden.

INFERRIOUR. adj. [inferior, Lat. inferiar, French.]

1. Lower in place.

2. Lower in station or rank of life.

A great person gets more by obliging his inferiour than by disdain'ing him.

South.

3. Lower in value or excellency.

The love of liberty with life is giv'n,
And life itself th' inferiour gift of heav'n.

Dryden.

I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of.

Dryden.

4. Subordinate.

General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions.

Watts.

INFERRIOUR. n. f. [from the adjective.] One in a lower rank or station than another.

INFERNAL. adj. [infernal, French; infernus, Lat.] Hellish; tartarean.

His gigantick limbs, with large embrace,
Infold nine acres of infernal space.

Dryden's En.

INFERNAL STONE. n. f.

Infernal stone, or the lunar caustick, is prepared from an evaporated solution of silver, or from crystals of silver. It is a very powerful caustick, eating away the flesh and even the bones to which it is applied.

Hill's Mat. Med.

INFERTILE. adj. [infertile, Fr. in and fertile.] Unfruitful; not productive; without fecundity; infecund.

Ignorance being of itself, like stiff clay, an infertile soil, when pride comes to scorch and harden it, it grows perfectly impenetrable.

Government of the Tongue.

INFERTILITY. n. f. [infertilit  , Fr. from infertile.] Unfruitfulness; want of fertility.

INF

The same distemper of the air that occasioned the plague, occasioned also the infirmiti or noxiousness of the soil, whereby the fruits of the earth became either very small, or very unwholesome. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
TO INFEST. v. a. [infester, Fr. infeste, Latin.] To harass; to disturb; to plague.
 They ceased not, in the mean while, to strengthen that part which in heart they favoured, and to infest by all means, under colour of other quarrels, their greatest adversaries in this cause. H. oer.
 Although they were a people infested, and mightily hated of all others, yet was there nothing of force to work the ruin of their state, till the time beforementioned was expired. Hook.
 Unto my feeble breast
 Come gently; but not with that mighty rage
 Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infest,
 And hearts of greatest heroes dost enrage. Spenser.
 They were no mean, distressed, calamitous persons that fled to him for refuge; but of so great quality, as it was apparent that they came not thither to protect their own fortune, but to infest and invade his. Bacon's Henry VII.
 These, said the genius, are envy, avarice, superstition, love, with the like cares and passions that infest human life. Addison's Spectator.
 No disease infests mankind more terrible in its symptoms and effects. Arbutnot on Diet.
INFESTIVITY. n. f. [in and festivity.] Mournfulness; want of cheerfulness.
INFESTED. adj. [in and festel.] Ranking; inveterate.

Infested grudge, the which his mother felt,
 So soon as Clarion he did behold,
 His heart with vengeful malice inly swelt. Spenser.
INFUDATION. n. f. [in and feudum, Lat.] The act of putting one in possession of a fee or estate.
 Another military provision was conventional and by tenure, upon the infudation of the tenant, and was usually called knight's service. Hale's Common Law of England.
INFIDEL. n. f. [infidelle, Fr. infidèle, Latin.] An unbeliever; a miscreant; a pagan; one who rejects Christianity.
 Exhorting her, if she did marry, yet not to join herself to an infidel, as in those times some widows christian had done, for the advancement of their estate in this world. Hooker.
INFIDELITY. n. f. [infidelité, French; infidelitas, Lat.]
 1. Want of faith.
 The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.
 2. Disbelief of Christianity.
 One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion; but to it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceness and contention, as if the faculty of mankind depended upon it. Addison's Spectator.
 3. Treachery; deceit.
 The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up this business of life, render it silly and uncomfortable. Spectator.
INFINITE. adj. [infini, French; infinitus, Latin.]
 1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.
 Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.
 What's time, when on eternity we think?
 A thousand ages in that sea must sink:
 Time's nothing but a word; a million
 Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.
 Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will controuls
 The inward bent and motion of our souls!
 Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
 Between the cause and cure of my disease? Prior.
 When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times. Locke.
 Even an angel's comprehensive thought
 Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:
 Our vast conceptions are by swelling brought,
 Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought. Dennis.
 2. It is hyperbolically used for large; great.
INFINITELY. adv. [infinite.] Without limits; without bounds; immensely.
 Nothing may be infinitely desired, but that good which indeed is infinite. Hooker.
 This is Antonio,
 To whom I am to infinitely bound. Shakesp. Merch. of Ven.
 The king saw that contrariwise it would follow, that England, though much less in territory, yet should have infinitely more soldiers of their native forces than those other nations have. Bacon's Henry VII.

INF

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have professed to act under a full persuasion of this great article. Rogers.
INFINITENESS. n. f. [from infinite.] Immenity; boundlessness; infinity.
 The cunning of his flattery, the readiness of his tears, the infiniteness of his vows, were but among the weakest threads of his net. Shakesp.
 Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightiness, and express that infinite distance between his infiniteness and our weakness. Taylor.
INFINITE/SIMAL. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.
INFINITIVE. adj. [infinitif, Fr. infinitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms, or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
INFINITUDE. n. f. [from infinite.]
 1. Infinity; immensity.
 Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar Stood rull'd, stood vast infinitude confin'd. Milt. Par. Lost.
 Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, or continued quantity, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude; yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from parts actually distinguished. Hale.
 2. Boundless number.
 We see all the good sense of the age cut out, and minced into almost an infinitude of distinctions. Addison's Spectator.
INFINITY. n. f. [infinitus, French; infinitas, Latin.]
 1. Immenity; boundlessness; unlimited qualities.
 There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.
 The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he our felicity and bliss. Hooker.
 2. Endless number. An hyperbolic use of the word.
 Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.
 The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad symptoms. Arbutnot on Diet.
INFIRM. adj. [infirmus, French; infirmus, Latin.]
 1. Weak; feeble; disabled of body.
 Here stand I your brave;
 A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man. Shakesp.
 That on my head all might be visited,
 Thy frailty, and infirm sex, forgiv'n;
 To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milt. Par. Lost.
 2. Weak of mind; irresolute.
 I'll go no more;
 I am afraid to think what I have done:
 Look out again, I dare not.
 — Infirm of purpose;
 Give me the dagger. Shakesp. Macbeth.
 3. Not stable; not solid.
 He who fixes upon false principles, treads upon infirm ground, and so sinks; and he, who fails in his deductions from right principles, stumbles upon firm ground, and falls. South.
TO INFIRM. v. a. [infirmus, Fr. infirmus, Lat.] To weaken; to shake; to enfeeble. Not in use.
 Some contrary spirits will object this as a sufficient reason to infirm all those points. Raleigh's Essays.
 The spleen is unjustly introduced to invigorate the finister side, which, being dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
INFIRMARY. n. f. [infirmaria, French.] Lodgings for the sick.
 These buildings to be for privy lodgings on both sides, and the end for privy galleries, whereof one should be for an infirm, if any special person should be sick. Bacon.
INFIRMITY. n. f. [infirmus, French.]
 1. Weakness of sex, age, or temper.
Infirmity.
 Which waits upon worn times, hath something seiz'd
 His with'd ability. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

 I am with child, ye bloody homicides. Shakesp. Henry VI.
 If he had done or said any thing amiss, he desired their worthips to think it was his infirmities. Shak. Julius Cæs.
 Are the infirmities of the body, pains, and diseases his complaints? His faith reminds him of the day when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality. Rogers.
 2. Failing; weakness; fault.
 A friend should bear a friend's infirmities;
 But Brutus makes mine greater than they are. Shakesp. Cæsar.
 Many infirmities made it appear more requisite, that a wiser man should have the application of his interest. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
 3. Disease;

INF

How difficult is it to preserve a great name, when he that has acquired it, is so obnoxious to such little weaknesses and infirmities, as are no small diminution to it, when discovered. Addison's Spectator.
 3. Disease; malady.
 General laws are like general rules of physick, according whereunto, as now, no wife man will desire himself to be cured, if there be joined with his disease some special accident, in regard that thereby others in the same infirmity, but without the like accident, may. Hooker.
INFIRMNESS. n. f. [from infirm.] Weakness; feebleness.
 Some experiments may discover the infirmness and insufficiency of the peripatetic doctrine. Boyle.
TO INFIX. v. a. [infixus, Latin.] To drive in; to fasten.
 And at the point two stings infix'd are,
 Both deadly sharp, that sharpest steel exceeden far. Fa. Qu.
 I never lov'd myself,
 'Till now, infix'd, I behold myself,
 Drawn in the flatter'd table of her eye. Shakesp. K. John.
 Immovable, infix'd, and frozen round.
 That sting infix'd within her haughty mind,
 And her proud heart with secret sorrow pin'd. Dryden.
 Arcite on Emily had fix'd his look:
 The fatal dart a ready passage found,
 And deep within her heart infix'd the wound. Dryden.
TO INFLAME. v. a. [inflammare, Latin.]
 1. To kindle; to set on fire.
 Love more clear than yourselves, dedicated to a love, I fear, more cold than yourselves, with the clearness lays a night of sorrow upon me, and with the coldness inflames a world of fire within me. Sidney.

- Treason is not inherited, my lord. Shak. As you like it.
 Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain,
 Which with pain purchas'd doth inherit pain. Shakespeare.
 Prince Harry is valiant; for the cold blood he did naturally inherit of his father he hath, like lean, sterile land, manured with excellent good store of fertile ferries. Shaksp. Henry IV.
 Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth. Mat.
 The son can receive from him the portion of good things, and advantages of education naturally due to him, without pite, that was vested in him for the good of others; and therefore the son cannot claim or inherit it by a title, which is founded wholly on his own private good. Locke.
 We must know how the first ruler, from whom any one claims, came by his authority, before we can know who has a right to succeed him in it, and inherit it from him. Locke.
 Unwilling to sell an estate he had some prospect of inherit- ing, he formed delays. Addison's Spect. N^o. 198.

INL

Intending to have try'd
The silver favour which you gave,
In ink the shining point I dy'd,
And drench'd it in the fable wave.
Vitriol is the active or chief ingredient in ink, and no other salt will strike the colour with galls. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
I have found pens blacked almost all over when I had a while carried them about me in a silver ink case. Boyle.
The secretary poured the ink box all over the writings, and so defaced them. Hovel's Vocal Forest.
He that would live clear of envy must lay his finger upon his mouth, and keep his hand out of the ink pot. L'Estrange.
I could hardly refrain them from throwing the ink bottle at one another's heads. Arbutnot's Hist. of John Bull.
2. Ink is used for any liquor with which they write: as, red ink; green ink.
To INK. v. a. [from the noun.] To black or daub with ink: as, his face is all over inked.
INKHORN. n. f. [ink and horn.] A portable case for the instruments of writing, commonly made of horn.
Bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the jail; we are now to examine those men. Shakespeare. Much ado about Nothing.
Ere that we'll suffer such a prince
To be disgrac'd by an inkhorn mate,
We, and our wives and children, all will fight. Shakespeare.
What is more frequent than to say, a silver inkhorn. Grew.
INKLE. n. f. A kind of narrow fillet; a tape.
Inlet, caddises, cambricks, lawns: why he fongs them over as they were gods and goddesses. Shakespeare.
I twitch'd his dangling garter from his knee:
He wist not when the hempen string I drew,
Now mine I quickly doff of inkle blue. Gay's Pastorals.
INKLING. n. f. [This word is derived by Skinner from inklincken, to found within. This sense is still retained in Scotland: as, I heard not an inkling.] Hint; whisper; intimation.
Our business is not unknown to the senate: they have had inkling what we intend to do, which now we'll shew them in deeds. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
We in Europe, notwithstanding all the remote discoveries and navigations of this last age, never heard of any of the least inkling or glimpse of this island. Bacon's New Atlantis.
They had some inkling of secret messages between the merchants of Newcastle and young Hotham. Clarendon, b. viii.
Aboard a Corinthian vessel he got an inkling among the ship's crew of a conspiracy. L'Estrange's Fables.

England bound in with the triumphant sea,
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege
Of wat'ry Neptune, is bound in with flame,
With inky blots and rotten parchment bonds. Shakespeare.
2. Resembling ink.
The darkness of the liquor presently began to be discussed, and grow pretty clear and transparent, losing its inky blackness. Boyle on Colours.
3. Black as ink.
'Tis not alone my inky cloak good mother,
Nor customary suits of solemn black,
That can denote me truly. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
INLAND. adj. [in and land.] Interior; lying remote from the sea.
In this wide inland sea, that high by name,
The idle lake, my wand'ring ship I row. Fairy Queen.
Goodly laws, like little inland seas, will carry even ships upon their waters. Spenser's State of Ireland.
An old religious uncle of mine was, in his youth, an inland man. Shakespeare's As you like it.
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.
This person did publish a pamphlet printed in England for a general excise, or inland duty. Swift.
INLAND. n. f. Interior or midland parts.
Out of these small beginnings, gotten near to the mountains, did they spread themselves into the inland. Spenser.

A fine bargain indeed, to part with all our continued ports, which the greater the inlet is are so much the better, for the imaginary pleasure of a freight shore. Bentley.
Inlets amongst broken lands and islands, rocks and shoals. Ellis's Voyage.
INLY. adj. [from in.] Interior; internal; secret.
Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou would'st as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words. Shakespeare.
INLY. adv. Internally; within; secretly; in the heart.
Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld. Fa. Qu.
I've inly wept;
Or should have spoke ere this. Shakespeare's Temp.
Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone,
That beat out life. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
The stubborn only to destroy
These growing thoughts, my mother soon perceiving
By words at times cast forth, inly rejoic'd,
And said to me apart. Milton's Par. Reg. b. i.
The soldiers shout around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardor: inly pleas'd to see His host. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
INMATE. n. f. [in and mate.]
Inmates are those that be admitted to dwell for their money jointly with another man, though in several rooms of his mansion-house, passing in and out by one door. Cowell.
So spake the enemy of mankind, inclos'd
In serpent, inmate bad! and toward Eve Address'd his way. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown,
Suspected to a fervent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth, as inmate guests Too numerous. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xiii.
Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife:
If thence we fly, the cause admits no doubt,
None but an inmate foe could force us out. Dryden's Aur.
INMOST. adj. [from in.] Deepest within; remotest from the surface.
'Tis you must dig with mattock and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth. Shakespeare.
Rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,
Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Addison on Italy.
Comparing the quantity of light reflected from the several rings, I found that it was most copious from the first or inmost, and in the exterior rings became less and less. Newton.
He sends a dreadful groan: the rocks around Through all their inmost hollow caves resound. Pope.
I got into the inmost court, and I applied my face to the windows. Gulliver's Travels.
INN. n. f. [inn, Saxon, a chamber.] A house of entertainment for travellers.
How all this is but a fair inn,
Of fairer guests which dwell within. Sidney, b. ii.
Palmer,

INN

Palmer, quoth he, death is an equal doom
To good and bad, the common inn of rest;
But, after death, the trial is to come,
When best shall be to them that lived best. Fairy Queen.
Now day is spent,
Therefore with me ye may take up your inn. Fairy Queen.
The West, that glimmers with some streaks of day,
Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
That very hour, and in the self-same inn,
A poor mean woman was delivered. Shakespeare.
Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end. Dryden.
One may learn more here in one day, than in a year's rambling from one inn to another. Lo. Ke.
2. A house where students were boarded and taught: whence we still call the colleges of common law inns of court.
Go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of courts: down with them all. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

The most dangerous poisons, skilfully managed, may be made not only innocuous, but of all other medicines the most effectual. Grew's Colic.
INNOCUOUSLY. adv. [from innocuous.] Without mischievous effects.
Whether quails, from any peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medicinally use the same. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
INNOCUOUSNESS. n. f. [from innocuous.] Harmlessness.
The blow which shakes a wall, or beats it down, and kills men, hath a greater effect than that which penetrates into a mud wall, and doth little harm; for that innocuousness of the effect makes, that, although in itself it be as great as the other, yet 'tis little observed. Digby on Bodies.
To INNOVATE. v. a. [innovare, French; innovo, Latin.]
1. To bring in something not known before.
Time indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees. Bacon.
Men pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon, and care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniences. Bacon.
Former things
Are set aside like abdicated kings;
And every moment alters what is done,
And innovates some act till then unknown. Dryden.
Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry; every man therefore is not fit to innovate. Dryden.
2. To change by introducing novelties.
From his attempts upon the civil power he proceeds to innovate God's worship. South's Sermons.
INNOVATION. n. f. [innovation, French, from innovare.] Change by the introduction of novelty.
The love of things ancient doth argue stay'dness; but levity and want of experience maketh apt unto innovations. Hooker.
It were good that men in innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees. Bacon's Essays.
Great changes may be made in a government, yet the form continue; but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to make it of a piece with the constitution. Swift.
INNOVATOR. n. f. [innovateur, French, from innovare.]
1. An introducer of novelties.
I attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to th' publick weal. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
Every medicine is an innovation; and he that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator: and if time of course alter things to the worse, and wisdom and counsel shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end?
2. One that makes changes by introducing novelties.
He counsels him to detest and persecute all innovators of divine worship. South's Sermons.
INNOXIOUS.

INO

INNOXIOUS. adj. [innoxius, Latin.]

1. Free from mischievous effects.
Innoxious flames are often seen on the hair of mens heads and hories manes. Digby.
We may safely use purgatives, they being benign, and of innoxious qualities. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Sent by the better genius of the night,
Innoxious gleaming on the horse's mane,
The meteor fits. Thomson's Autumn.

2. Pure from crimes.
Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innocent through his age. Pope.
INNOXIOUSLY. adv. [from innocent.] Harmlessly.
Animals, that can innocently digest these poisons, become antidotal to the poison digested. Brown's Vulg. Err.
INNOXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from innocent.] Harmlessness.
INNUEENDO. n. f. [innuendo, from innuo, Latin.] An oblique hint.

As if the commandments, that require obedience and forbidd murder, were to be indicted for a libellous innuendo upon all the great men that come to be concerned. L'Estrange.
Mercury, though employed on a quite contrary errand, owns it a marriage by an innuendo. Dryden.

Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints that Stella is no chicken;
Your innuendo's, when you tell us,
That Stella loves to talk with fellows. Swift.

INNUMERABLE. adj. [innumerable, Fr. innumerable, Lat.] Not to be counted for multitude.

You have sent innumerable substance
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Cover me, ye pines,
Ye cedars! with innumerable boughs
Hide me where I may never see them more. Milton.

In lines, which appear of an equal length, one may be longer than the other by innumerable parts. Locke.

INNUMERABLY. adv. [from innumerable.] Without number.

INNUMEROUS. adj. [innumerus, Latin.] Too many to be counted.

'Twould be some solace yet, some little chearing,
In this clofe dungeon of innumerable boughs. Milton.
I take the wood,
And in thick shelter of innumerable boughs,
Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows. Pope's Odyssey.

TO INOCULATE. v. a. [inoculo, in and oculus, Latin.]

1. To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all
How to ingraft, how to inoculate. May's Virg. Georg.

Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the state,
To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate. Dryden.

2. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thy stock is too much out of date,
For tender plants inoculate. Cleveland.

Where lilies, in a lovely bourn, Inoculate carnation. Cleveland.

INOCULATION. n. f. [inoculatio, Lat. from inoculare.]

1. Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone-fruit, and upon oranges and jalmies. In order to perform it, be provided with a sharp pen-knife, having a flat haft, and some sound bass-mat. Having taken off the cuttings from the trees you would propagate, chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut cross the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in tripping are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock with the flat haft of your pen-knife clear to the wood, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock, cutting off any part of the rind belonging to the bud which may be too long; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round with bass-mat, beginning at the under part of the slit, and so proceed to the top, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud.

The March following cut off the stock three inches above the bud, sloping it, that the wet may pass off: to this part of the stock, above the bud, fasten the shoot which proceeds from the bud, and which would be in danger of being blown out; but this must continue no longer than one year, after which it must be cut off close above the bud, that the stock may be covered thereby. Mil'er.

At last distemper'd, discontented thoughts;
Vain hopes, vain aims, inordinate desires,
Blown up with high conceits engend'ring pride. Milton.

Blown up with high conceits engend'ring pride.
From inordinate love and vain fear comes all unquietness of spirit. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

INORDINATELY. adv. [from inordinate.] Irregularly; not rightly.

As soon as a man desires any thing inordinately, he is presently disquieted in himself. Taylor.

INORDINATENESS. n. f. [from inordinate.] Want of regularity; intemperance of any kind.

INORDINATION. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; deviation from right.

Schoolmen and casuists, having too much philosophy to clear a lye from that intrinsic inordination and deviation from right reason, inherent in the nature of it, held that a lye was absolutely and universally sinful. South's Sermons.

INORGANICAL. adj. [in and organical.] Void of organs or instrumental parts.

We come to the lowest and the most inorganic parts of matter.

TO INOSCULATE. v. n. [in and osculum, Lat.] To unite by apposition or contact.

This fifth conjugation of nerves is branched to the ball of the eye, and to the præcordia alio in some measure, by inoculating with one of its nerves. Derham's Physico-Theology.

INOSULATION. n. f. [from inoculare.] Union by conjunction of the extremities.

The almost infinite ramifications and inosculations of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses. Boyle.

INO

In the stem of Elaiana they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation. Howel.

2. The practice of transplanting the small-pox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection. Quincy.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease. Arbutn.

INOCULATOR. n. f. [from inoculare.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.
2. One who propagates the small-pox by inoculation.

Had John a Gaddesden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators. Friend's Hist. of Physick.

INODORATE. adj. [in and odoratus, Lat.] Having no scent.

Whites are more inodorous than flowers of the same kind coloured. Bacon's Natural History.

INODOROUS. adj. [inodorus, Latin.] Wanting scent; not affecting the nose.

The white of an egg is a viscous, unactive, insipid, inodorous liquor. Arbutnot on Aliments.

INOFFENSIVE. adj. [in and offensivus.]

1. Giving no scandal; giving no provocation.
A stranger, inoffensive, unprovoking. Fleetwood.

However inoffensive we may be in other parts of our conduct, if we are found wanting in this trial of our love, we shall be disowned by God as traitors. Reger's Sermons.

2. Giving no pain; causing no terror.
Should infants have taken offence at any thing, diverting their thoughts, or mixing pleasant and agreeable appearances with it, must be used, 'till it be grown inoffensive to them. Le.

3. Harmless; hurtless; innocent.
For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive most. Milton.

With what'er gall thou set'st thyself to write,
Thy inoffensive satires never bite. Dryden.

Hark, how the cannon, inoffensive now,
Gives signs of gratulation. Phillips.

4. Unembarrassed; without stop or obstruction. A Latin mode of speech.

From hence a passage broad,
Smooth, easy, inoffensive, down to hell. Milton's Paradi. Lost.

INOFFENSIVELY. adv. [from inoffensive.] Without appearance of harm; without harm.

INOFFENSIVENESS. n. f. [from inoffensive.] Harmlessness; freedom from appearance of harm.

INOFFICIOUS. adj. [in and officiosus.] Not civil; not attentive to the accommodation of others.

INOPINATE. adj. [inopinatus, Lat. inopinatus, Fr.] Not expected.

INOPPORTUNE. adj. [inopportunus, Latin.] Unseasonable; inconvenient.

INORDINACY. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; disorder.

It is safer to use inordination.

They become very sinful by the excess, which were not so in their nature: that inordinacy sets them in opposition to God's designation. Government of the Tongue.

INORDINATE. adj. [in and ordinatus, Latin.] Irregular; disorderly; deviating from right.

These people at first were wisely brought to acknowledge allegiance to the kings of England; but being straight left unto their own inordinate life, they forgot what before they were taught. Spenser on Ireland.

Thence raise

 Of his rich chariot, that might still the insecution feel,
 With the extreme hairs of his tail. Chapman's Iliad.
INSENSATE. adj. [insensé, French; insensato, Italian.] Stupid; wanting thought; wanting sensibility.
 Ye be reprobrates; obdurate insensate creatures. Hammond.
 So fond are mortal men,
 As their own ruin on themselves 't invite,
Insensate left, or to sense reprobate,
 And with blindness internal struck. Milton's Agonistes.
INSENSIBILITY.

INS

INSENSIBILITY. n. f. [insensibilité, French; from insensible.]
 1. Inability to perceive.
Insensibility of slow motions may be thus accounted for: motion cannot be perceived without perception of the parts of space which it left, and those which it next acquires. Glanv.
 2. Stupidity; dulness of mental perception.
 3. Torpor; dulness of corporal sense.
INSENSIBLE. adj. [insensible, French.]
 1. Imperceptible; not discoverable by the senses.
 What is honour? a word. What is that word honour?
 What a trim reckoning! Who hath it? he that died a Wednesday. Doth he feel it? no. Doth he hear it? no. Is it insensible then? yes, to the dead: but will it not live with the living? no. Why? detraction will not suffer it. Shakespeare.
 Two small and almost insensible pricks were found upon Cleopatra's arm.
 The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible. Newton's Opt.

 3. Without mental or corporal sense.
INSEPARABILITY. n. f. [from inseparable.] The quality of inseparableness; being such as cannot be severed or divided.
 The parts of pure space are immovable, which follows from their inseparability, motion being nothing but change of distance between any two things; but this cannot be between parts that are inseparable. Locke.
INSEPARABLE. adj. [inseparable, French; inseparabilis, Latin.] Not to be disjoined; united so as not to be parted.
 Ancient times figure both the incorporation and inseparable conjunction of counsel with kings, and the wife and politic use of counsel by kings. Bacon.
 Thou, my shade,
Inseparable, must with me along;
 For death from sin no pow'r can separate. Milt. Par. Lost.
 Care and toil came into the world with sin, and remain ever since inseparable from it.
 No body feels pain, that he wishes not to be eased of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparably from it. Locke.
 The parts of pure space are inseparable one from the other, so that the continuity cannot be separated, neither really nor mentally. Locke.
 Together out they fly,
Inseparable now the truth and lie;
 And this or that unmixt no mortal ear shall find. Pope.
INSEPARABLY. adv. [from inseparable.] With indissoluble union.
 Drowning of metals is, when the baser metal is so incorporate with the more rich as it cannot be separated; as if silver should be inseparably incorporated with gold. Bacon.
 Him thou shalt enjoy,
Inseparably thine. Milton.
 Atheists must confess, that before that assigned period matter had exist'd eternally, inseparably endued with this principle of attraction; and yet had never attracted nor convened before, during that infinite duration. Bentley's Sermons.
TO INSERT. v. a. [inserere, Fr. inserere, insertum, Latin.] To place in or amongst other things.
 Those words were very weakly inserted, where they are so liable to misconception. Stillingfleet.

So interview'd, so like, so much the same:
None, this mere nature, that mere art can name. Denham.

The proud theatres disclose the scene,
Which interview Britons seem to raise,
And show the triumph which their shame displays. Dryden.

He so interviews truth with probable fiction, that he puts a pleasing fallacy upon us. Dryden.

It appeared a vast ocean planted with islands, that were covered with fruits and flowers, and *interview*ed with a thousand little shining seas that ran among them. Addison's Spect.

It is a confusion of kitchen and parterre, orchard and flower-garden, which lie so mixt and *interview*ed with one another, as to look like a natural wilderness. Speulat.

The Supreme Infinite could not make intelligent creatures, without implanting in their natures a most ardent desire, *interview*ed in the substance of their spiritual natures, of being reunited with himself. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.

I do not altogether disapprove the interviewing texts of scripture through the style of your sermon. Swift's Miscel.

TO INTERWISH. v. a. [inter and wish.] To wish mutually to each other.

The venom of all stepdames, gamester's gall,
What tyrants and their subjects interview,
All ill fall on that man. Donne.

INTESTABLE. adj. [intestabilis, Latin.] Disqualified to make a will.

A person excommunicated is rendered infamous and intestable both actively and passively. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INTESTATE. adj. [intestat, Fr. intestatus, Latin.] Wanting a will; dying without will.

Why should calamity be full of words?
—Windy attorneys to their client woes,
Airy succeders of intestate joys,
Poor breathing orators of miseries. Shakespeare's Richard III.

INT

To INTHRONÉ. v. a. [in and throne]. To raise to royalty; to seat on a throne.
 One, chief, in gracious dignity intron'd, Shines o'er the rest. Thomson's Summer, l. 395.
 INTIMACY. n. f. [from intimate]. Close familiarity.
 It is in our power to confine our friendships, and intimacies to men of virtue. Rogers's Sermons.
 INTIMATE. adj. [intimado, Spanish; intimus, Lat.].
 1. Inmost; inward; intestine.
 They knew not
 That what I mention'd was of God, I knew
 From intimate impulse, and therefore urged on The marriage. Milton's Agonist, l. 221.
 Fear being to intimate to our natures, it is the strongest bond of laws. Tillotson's Sermons.
 2. Near; not kept at distance.
 Moses was with him in the retirements of the mount, received there his private instructions; and when the multitude were thundered away from any approach, he was honoured with an intimate and immediate admission. South's Sermons.
 3. Familiar; closely acquainted.
 United by this sympathetic bond,
 You grow familiar, intimate, and fond. Rowcommon.
 INTIMATE. n. f. [intimado, Spanish; intime, French; intimus, Latin]. A familiar friend; one who is trusted with our thoughts.
 The design was to entertain his reason with a more equal converse, assign him an intimate whose intellect as much corresponded with his as did the outward form. Gov. Tongue.
 To INTIMATE. v. a. [intimer, French; intimare, low Latin].
 To hint; to point out indirectly, or not very plainly.
 Alexander Van Suchten tells us, that by a way he intim- ates, may be made a mercury of copper, not of the silver colour of other mercuries, but green. Boyle.
 The names of simple ideas and substances, with the abstract ideas in the mind, intimate some real existence, from which was derived their original pattern. Locke.
 'Tis the divinity that flirts within us;
 'Tis heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
 And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.
 INTIMATELY. adv. [from intimate].
 1. Closely; with intermixture of parts.
 The same economy is observed in the circulation of the chyle with the blood, by mixing it intimately with the parts of the fluid to which it is to be assimilated. Arbutnot.
 2. Nearly; inseparably.
 Quality, as it regards the mind, has its rise from knowledge and virtue, and is that which is more essential to us, and more intimately united with us. Addison's Spect. N. 219.
 3. Familiarly; with close friendship.
 INTIMATION. n. f. [intimation, Fr. from intimate]. Hint; obscure or indirect declaration or direction.
 Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations;
 the first hints and whispers of good and evil, that pass in his heart. South's Sermons.
 Of those that are only probable we have some reasonable intimations, but not a demonstrative certainty. Woodward.
 Besides the more solid parts of learnings, there are several little intimations to be met with on medals. Addison.
 INTIME. adj. Inward; being within the mafs; not being external, or on the surface; internal.
 As to the composition or dissolution of mixed bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intime application of the agents, water hath the principality and excels over earth. Digby on Bodies.
 To INTIMIDATE. v. a. [intimider, French; in and timidus,
 Lat.]. To make fearful; to daunt; to make cowardly.
 Now guilt once harbour'd in the conscious breast, Intimidates the brave, degrades the great. Irene.
 INTIRE. n. f. [intire, Lat. entire, French; better written entire, which see, and all its derivatives.]. Whole; undiminished; broken.
 The lawful power of making laws, to command whole politick societies of men, belongeth to properly unto the same intire societies, that for any prince to exercise the same of himself, and not either by express commission immediately and personally received from God, or else by authority derived at the first from their consent upon whose persons he imposes laws, it is no better than mere tyranny. Hooker.
 INTIRENESS. n. f. [from intire; better entireness]. Wholeness;
 integrity.
 So shall all times find me the same:
 You this intireness better may fulfil,
 Who have the pattern with you still. Donne.
 INTO. prep. [in and to].
 1. Noting entrance with regard to place.
 If iron will acquire by mere continuance an habitual inclination to the fire it held, how much more may education, being a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature. Wotton.
 To give life to that which has yet no being, is to frame a living creature, fashion the parts, and having fitted them together, to put into them a living soul. Locke.

INT

 Water introduces into vegetables the matter it bears along with it. Woodward's Nat. Hist.
 Acid substances, which pass into the capillary tubes, must irritate them into greater contraction. Arbutnot on Aliments.
 2. Noting penetration beyond the outside, or some action which reaches beyond the superficies or open part.
 To look into letters already opened or dropt is held an un-generous act. Pope.
 2. Noting a new state to which any thing is brought by the agency of a cause. Bacon.
 They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words.
 Compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than such as they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.
 A man must sin himself into a love of other men's sins; for a bare notion of this black art will not carry him so far. South.
 Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate,
 When the mad people rise against the state,
 To look them into duty; and command
 An awful silence with thy lifted hand. Dryden's Tefus.
 It concerns every man that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters. Tillotson.
 He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of assiduous application. Smalridge.
 In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue. Addison on Italy.
 It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this means collected and brought into one mafs. Woodward.
 Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author; and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue. Atterbury's Sermon.
 It is no way congruous, that God should be always frightening and astonishing men into an acknowledgement of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence. Atterbury's Sermon.
 A man may whore and drink himself into atheism; but it is impossible he should think himself into it. Bentley.
 INTOLEABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Lat. intolerable, Fr.].
 1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be born; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.
 If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable. Taylor.
 His awful presence did the crowd surprize,
 Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
 Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly ways,
 So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Dryden.
 Some men are quickly weary of one thing: the same study long continued in is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes is to a court lady. Leece.
 From Param's top th' Almighty rode, Intolerable day proclaim'd the God. Broom.
 2. Bad beyond sufferance.
 INTOLEABLENESS. n. f. [from intolerable]. Quality of a thing not to be endured.
 INTOLEABLY. adv. [from intolerable]. To a degree beyond endurance.
 INTOLEANT. adj. [intolerant, French.]. Not enduring; not able to endure.
 Too great moisture affects human bodies with one class of diseases, and too great dryness with another; the powers of human bodies being limited and intolerant of excesses. Arbutnot.
 To INTOMB. v. a. [in and tomb]. To inclose in a funeral monument; to bury.
 What commandment finally had they for the ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead, after which custom notwithstanding our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intomb'd. Hooker, l. i.
 Is't night's predominance or the day's shame,
 That darkness does the face of earth intomb. Shakespeare.
 Mighty hero's more majestic shades,
 And youths intomb'd before their father's eyes. Dryden.
 To INTONATE. v. a. [intone, Lat.]. To thunder.
 INTONATION. n. f. [intonation, Fr. from intonate]. The act of thundering. Dis.
 To INTOPE. v. n. [from intone, or rather from tone; intone, French.]. To make a slow protracted noise.
 So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to a Harmonick twang. Pope's Dunciad, l. ii.
 To INTORET. v. a. [intortus, Lat.]. To twist; to wrench; to wring.
 The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits; and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intorted and wound up together. Arbutnot.
 With rev'rent hand the king presents the gold,
 Which round th' intorted horns the gilder roll'd. Pope.

INT

To INTOXICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Latin.]. To inebriate; to make drunk.
 The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicates; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.
 As with new wine intoxicated both,
 They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings,
 Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.
 My early mistress, now my ancient mule,
 That strong Circean liquor cease t' infuse,
 Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.
 What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equall'd, if not exceeded by some intoxi- cated zealots? Decay of Piety.
 Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having quite different qualities from the plant itself;
 for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbutnot.
 INTOXICATION. n. f. [from intoxicare]. Inebriation; ebriety;
 the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.
 That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Per-kin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Bacon.
 Whence can this proceed, but from that besetting intoxi- cation which verbal magic brings upon the mind. South.
 INTRACTABLE. n. f. [intractabilis, Lat. intractable, Fr.].
 1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obstinate.
 To love them who loves us is so natural a passion, that even the most intractable tempers obey its force. Rogers.
 2. Unmanageable; furious.
 By what means serpents, and other noxious and more intractable kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, got together. Woodward's Nat. Hist. p. iii.
 INTRACTABLENESS. n. f. [from intractable]. Obstinacy; perverseness.
 INTRACTABLY. adv. [from intractable]. Unmanageably; stubbornly.
 INTRANQUILITY. n. f. [in and tranquility]. Unquietness; want of rest.
 Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquility which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.
 INTRANSITIVE. v. a. [intransitivus, Latin.].
 [In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object;
 as, cursu, I run. Clarke's Lat. Gram.
 INTRANSUTABLE. adj. [in and transmutabile]. Unchangeable to any other substance.
 Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quick-silver to be intransutable, and therefore call it liquor eter-
 nus. Ray on the Creation.
 To INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure]. To lay up as in a treasury.
 There is a history in all mens lives,
 Figuring the nature of the times decess'd;
 The which observ'd, a man may prophesy,
 With a near aim, of the main chance of things
 As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
 And weak beginnings he intresured. Shakespeare Henry IV.
 To INTRENCH. v. n. [in and trencher, French.].
 1. To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another.
 Little I desire my scepter should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. K. Charles.
 That crawling insect, who from mud began,
 Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
 Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden's Aureng.
 We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.
 2. To break with hollows.
 His face
 Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
 Sat on his faded cheek. Milton's Par. Lost, b. i.
 3. To fortify with a trench: as, the allies were intrenched in their camp.
 INTRENCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained by one of his editors:
 The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the face left by any body which had passed through it. Hammer. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher, to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

INT

As easy may't thou the intrenchant air. Shakespeare.
 With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakespeare.
 INTRENCHMENT. n. f. [from intrench]. Fortification with a trench.
 INTREPID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Latin.]. Fearless; daring; bold; brave. Argyle.
 Calm and intrepid in the very throat
 Of sulphurous war, on Teniers dreadful field. Thomson.
 INTREPIDITY. n. f. [intrepidité, Fr.]. Fearlessness; courage;
 boldness.
 I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Gulliver's Travels.
 INTREPIDLY. adv. [from intrepid]. Fearlessly; boldly; dar-ingly.
 He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward in- trepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.
 INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricare]. State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.
 The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.
 INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Lat.]. Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.
 Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.
 His file in writing was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.
 To INTRICATE. [from the adjective]. To perplex; to darken.
 Not proper, nor in use.
 Alterations of surnames have so intricated, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.
 INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate]. With involution of one in another; with perplexity.
 That variety of factions, into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.
 INTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricate]. Perplexity; involution; obscurity.
 He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.
 INTRIGUE. n. f. [intrigue, French.].
 1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.
 These are the grand intrigues of man,
 These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flatman.
 A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison's Curran.
 The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.
 Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
 And marriage grown a money league. Swift's Miscel.
 2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.
 Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale's Originat. of Mankind.
 3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.
 As these causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.
 To INTRIGUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.]. To form plots; to carry on private designs.
 INTRIGUER. n. f. [intrigueur, Fr. from intrigue]. One who buies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots;
 one who pursues women.
 I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another. Addison.
 INTRIGUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue]. With intrigue; with secret plotting.
 INTRINSECAL. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinsecus, French.
 This word is now generally written intrinsecal, contrarily to etymology.].
 1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.
 These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson.
 The near and intrinsecal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley's Sermons.
 2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.
 He falls into intrinsecal society with Sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage, and gave him rather encouragement to woo fortune in court.
 Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours. Wotton.
 INTRINSECALLY.

INT

INTRINSICALLY. adv. [from intrinsecus.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.

A lye is a thing absolutely and intrinsically evil. South.
Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsically and solidly valuable. Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsically. Wotton.
If once bereaved of motion, it cannot of itself acquire it again; nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. *Bentley's Sermons.*INTRINSICK. adj. [intrinsecus, Latin.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsecus goodness consists in accordance, and sin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. *Hammond's Fundamentals.*2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing. The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsecus; this, his current value. *Grew.*His fame, like gold, the more 'tis try'd,
The more shall its intrinsecus worth proclaim. *Prior.*Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsecus value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. *Rogers's Sermons.*INTRINSECATE. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsecus.] Perplexed; entangled.Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain
Too intrinsecate unloose. *Shakspeare, King Lear.*Come, mortal wretch,
With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate
Of life at once unloose. *Shakspeare, Antony and Cleopatra.*TO INTRODUCE. v. a. [introduce, Lat. introducere, Fr.]1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person. Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. *Locke.*2. To bring something into notice or practice. This vulgar error whoever is able to reclaim, he shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. *Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.*An author who should introduce a sort of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. *Broome.*3. To produce; to give occasion. Whatsoever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. *Locke on Education.*4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives. INTRODUCTER. n. s. [introducere, Fr. from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person. 2. Any one who brings any thing into practice or notice.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. *Wotton.*It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess hath been lately, from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they who have succeeded to a miracle. *Swift.*INTRODUCTION. n. s. [introductione, Fr. introducere, Latin.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering to any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice. The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence. *Clarendon.*3. The preface or part of a book containing previous matter. INTRODUCTIVE. adj. [introducere, Fr. from introduce.]1. Serving as the means to something else. The truths of Christ crucified, is the Christian's philosophy, and a good life is the Christian's logic; that great introduction of another, and the change from rest to motion upon impulse, and the like, seem to have some connection. *Locke.*2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission. I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned introduction; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open. *Shakspeare.*3. Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill With loath'd introduction. *Milton's Paradise Lost.*4. How's this, my son? Why this introduction? Were not my orders that I should be private? *Addis. Cato.*I may close, after so long an introduction upon your meditations. *Wake's Preparation for Death.*5. Voluntary and uncalculated undertaking of any thing. It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and so stand charged with introduction and impertinency. *Watson.*TO INTRODUCE. v. a. [introduce, Latin.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value. Never

2. [In the Scottish law.] The act of intermeddling with another's effects: as, he shall be brought to an account for his intromissions with such an estate.TO INTROMIT. v. a. [intromitto, Latin.] To tend in; to let in; to admit; to allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters.Glasses in the window intromit light without cold to those in the room. *Holder's Elements of Speech.*Tinged bodies and liquors reflect some sorts of rays, and intromit or transmit other sorts. *Newton's Opt.*TO INTROSPECT. v. a. [introspectus, Latin.] To take a view of the inside.INTROSPECTION. n. s. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.The actions of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernible by man. *Hale's Origin of Mankind.*I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination. *Dryden.*INTROVIENT. adj. [intro and venio, Latin.] Entering; coming in.Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and obscured, from the commixture of introvenient nations, either by commerce or conquest. *Brown's Vulgar Errors.*TO INTRODUCE. v. n. [introduce, Latin.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners, to introduce where I am grac'd. *Shakspeare.*The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore that this might so enter, as not to introduce, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence. *South.*Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship
Introduces on your repose, and comes thus lateTo greet you with the tidings of success. *Rowe's Fa. Shere.*Some thoughts rise and introduce upon us, while we thus them; others fly from us, when we would hold them. *Watts.*2. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted. Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, introducing into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind. *Col. ii. 18.*TO INTRODUCE. v. a. To force without right or welcome. Not to introduce one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keeps secret, is represented by the winds shut up in a bulk hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into. *Pope.*INTRODER. n. s. [from introduce.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.And the hounds
Should drive upon the new transformed limbs,
Unmannerly intruder as thou art! *Shakspeare, Titus Andronicus.*Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Below thy fawning smiles on equal mates. *Shakspeare.*They were but intruders upon the possession, during the minority of the heir: they knew those lands were the rightful inheritance of that young lady. *Davies on Ireland.*Will you, a bold intruder, never learn
To know your basket, and your bread discern? *Dryden.*She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all strangers and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with. *Locke.*The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame. *Addison's Freeholder.*INTRODUCTION. n. s. [introductione, Fr. introducere, Latin.]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into any place or state.

It must raise more substantial superfluities, and fall upon very many excellent strains, which have been jostled off by the introduction of poetical fictions. *Brown's Vulgar Errors.*The separation of the parts of one body, upon the introduction of another, and the change from rest to motion upon impulse, and the like, seem to have some connection. *Locke.*2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission. I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned introduction; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open. *Shakspeare.*3. Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill With loath'd introduction. *Milton's Paradise Lost.*4. How's this, my son? Why this introduction? Were not my orders that I should be private? *Addis. Cato.*I may close, after so long an introduction upon your meditations. *Wake's Preparation for Death.*5. Voluntary and uncalculated undertaking of any thing. It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and so stand charged with introduction and impertinency. *Watson.*TO INTRODUCE. v. a. [introduce, Latin.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value. INV

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were introduced with the knowledge of it. *Clarendon.*Receive my counsel, and securely move;
Introduce thy fortune to the power above. *Dryden's Juven.*Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword
In Rome's defence, introduced to our care? *Addis. Cato.*He compos'd his billet-doux, and at the time appointed Went to introduce it to the hands of his confidant. *Arbuthnot.*INTUITION. n. s. [intuitus, intuor, Latin.]1. Sight of any thing. Used commonly of mental view; immediate knowledge. At our rate of judging, St. Paul had surely pass'd for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him. *Government of the Tongue.*The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. *Locke.*2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object. All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is inferrible. *Glanville's See.*Discursive was then almost as quick as intuition. *South.*He their single virtues did survey,
By intuition in his own large breast. *Dryden.*INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitif, French.]1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of reason. Immediate perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. *Locke.*Those lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstract notions, those exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one and the same person. *Bentley.*2. Seeing, not barely believing. Faith, beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. *Hooker.*3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination. The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work. *Hooker.*The soul receives Discursive or intuitive. *Milton.*INTUITIVELY. adv. [intuitivem, French.] Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception. That our love is found and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saving only the searcher of all mens hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his. *Hook.*God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. *Baker on Learning.*INTUMESCENCE. n. s. [intumescere, French; intumescere, Lat.]INTUMESCENCY. n. s. Swell; tumour; the act or state of swelling. According to the temper of the terebrant parts at the bottom, as they are more hardy or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescencies. *Brown.*This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and at the same time making the like effort upon the earth, occasions an earthquake. *Woodward's Nat. History.*INTURGESCENCE. n. s. [inturgescere, Latin.] Swelling; the act or state of swelling. Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescencies caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them. *Brown's Vulgar Err.*INTUSE. n. s. [intusus, Latin.] Bruise. TO INTWINE. v. a. [intwine, Latin.]1. To twist, or wreath together. This opinion, though false, yet intwined with a true, that the souls of men do never perish, abated the fear of death in them. *Hooker.*2. To compass by circling round it. The vest and veil divine,
Which wand'ring foliage and rich flow'rs intwine. *Dryden.*TO INVADE. v. a. [invado, Latin.]1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance. He will invade them with troops. *Hab. iii. 16.*Should he invade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms. *Knolles.*With dangerous expedition they invade Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault. *Milton.*Thy race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden's Zen.

INV

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. *Dryden.*In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main. *Dryden.*2. To attack; to assail; to assault. There shall be sedition among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings. *2 Esdr. xv. 16.*Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious form
Invades us to the skin; 'tis to thee:But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt. *Shakspeare, King Lear.*3. To violate with the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend. Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made;
And virtue may repel, though not invade. *Dryden.*INVADE. n. s. [from invado, Latin.]1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another. The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. *Bacon.*Their piety
In sharp contest of battle found no aid
Against invaders. *Milton's Paradise Lost.*That knowledge, like the coal from the altar, serves only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. *Decay of Piety.*Were he lost, the naked empire
Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders. *Denham's Sophy.*The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders. *Swift.*Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand;
Nor dread the bold invader's hand. *Prior.*Esteem and judgment with strong fancy join,
To call the fair invader in;
My darling favourite inclination, too,
All, all conspiring with the foe. *Granville.*2. An assailant. 3. Encroacher; intruder. The substance thereof was formerly comprised in that un-compounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders. *Hammond.*INVALESCENCE. n. s. [invalesco, Latin.] Strength; health; force. *Diets.*INVALID. adj. [invalidus, Fr. invalidus, Latin.] Weak; of no weight or cogency. Admitting motion in the heav'ns, to shew Invalid, that which thee to doubt it mov'd. *Milton.*TO INVALIDATE. v. a. [from invalid.] To weaken; to deprive of force or efficacy. To invalidate such a consequence, some things might be speciously enough alleged. *Boyle.*Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the faithfulness of his mistress, and it is ten to one but three kind words of her's shall invalidate all their testimonies. *Locke.*INVALID. n. s. [Fr.] One disabled by sickness or hurts. What beggar in the invalids,
With lameness broke, with blindness smitten, Wish'd ever decently to die? *Prior.*INVALIDITY. n. s. [in and validity; invaliditas, French.]1. Weakness; want of cogency. This is no English meaning. He ordered, that none who could work should be idle; and that none who could not work, by age, sickness, or invalidity, should want. *Temple.*INVALUABLE. adj. [in and valuable.] Precious above estimation; inestimable. The faith it produced would not be so free an act as it ought, to which are annexed all the glorious and invaluable privileges of believing. *Atterbury.*INVIARABLE. adj. [in and variarius, Lat. invariabile, Fr.] Unchangeable; constant. Being not able to design times by days, months, or years, they thought best to determine these alterations by some known and invariable signs, and such did they conceive the rising and setting of the fixed stars. *Brown's Vulg. Err.*The rule of good and evil would not then appear uniform and invariable, but would seem different, according to mens different complexions and inclinations. *Atterbury.*INVIARABLENESS. n. s. [from invariable.] Immutability; constancy. INVIARIBLY. adv. [from invariable.] Unchangeably; constantly. He, who steers his course invariably by this rule, takes the surest way to make all men praise him. *Atterbury.*INVASION. n. s. [invasio, French; invasio, Latin.]1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment. We made an invasion upon the Cherethites. 1 Sa. xxx.

INV

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy. Soul's Sermons.

The nations of th' Ausonian shore
Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar,
Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war. Dryd. En.

William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1066, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time 'till now, for one intire length of time, it shews at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes. Locke.

2. Attack of an epidemical disease.
What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbutnot.

INVASIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other mens possessions; not defensive.
I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryden.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands,
Lessen their people, and extend their lands;
By gaping nations hated and obey'd,
Lords of the desarts that their fwords had made. Arbutnot.

INVECTIVE. n. f. [from invective, Fr. invective, low Lat.] A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.
Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glossing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invektives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of Christian duty. Hooker.

So desprate thieves, all hopeles of their lives,
Breathe out invektives 'gainst the officers. Shakep. H. VI.

Cast off the respect fit to be continued between kings,
Even when their blood is hotted, he fell to bitter invektives against the French king. Bacon's H. VII.

Whilst we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invektives we make at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones. Dacay of Piety.

If we take satyr, in the general signification of the word, for an invektive, 'tis certain that 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryd. Juv. Dedication.

INVECTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.
Let him rail on; let his invektive muse
Have four and twenty letters to abuse. Dryden.

INVECTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abusively.
Thus most invektively he pierceth through
The body of the country, city, court,
Yea and of this our life; swearing that we Are meer usurers, tyrants. Shakepeare.

TO INVEIGH. v. a. [from inveigh, Latin.] To utter censure or reproach.
I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryden.

He inveighs severely against the folly of parties, in retaining scoundrels to retail their lies. Arbutnot.

INVEIGHER. n. f. [from inveigh.] Vehement railer.
One of these inveighers against mercury, in a course of seven weeks, could not cure one small herpes in the face. Wise man's Surgery.

TO INVEIGLE. v. a. [from inveigare, Ital. Minheo; avengler, or enaveigler, French, Skinner and Junius.] To persuade to something bad or hurtful; to wheedle; to allure; to seduce.
Most false Duessa, royal richly dight,
That easy was to inveigle weaker sight,
Was, by her wicked arts and wily skill,
Too false and strong for earthly skill or might. Fa. Queen.

Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him.
Yet have they many baits and guileful spells,
To inveigle and invite th' unwary sense
Of them that pass unwitting by the way. Milton.

Both right able
T' inveigle and draw in the rabble. Hudibras.

Those drops of prettiness, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to exalt our conceptions, not inveigle or detain our passions. Boyle.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking. Temple.

The inveigling a woman, before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old. Spektator.

INVEIGLER. n. f. [from inveigle.] Seducer; deceiver; allurer to ill.
Being presented to the emperor for his admirable beauty, the prince clapt him up as his inveigler. Sandys.

TO INVENT. v. a. [from invent, French; invenio, Latin.]
1. To discover; to find out; to excogitate; to produce something not made before.
The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

By their count, which lovers books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains. Spektator.

Matter of mirth enough, though there were none
She could devise, and thousand ways invent
To feed her foolish humour and vain jolliment. Fa. Queen.

Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of mischief. Anon vi. 5.

We may invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our enemies. Milton.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction of their beads; both which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon. Ray.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace,
By manag'd fire and late invented eyes. Blacimore.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refrain'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd. Creech.

The ship by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water. Arbutnot.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.
I never did such things as those men have maliciously invented against me. Sufan. xlii.

Here is a strange figure invented, against the plain sense of the words. Stillingfleet.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate. Shakepeare.

As lean-fac'd envy in her lothsome cave,
Hercules's meeting with pleasure and virtue, was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates, and in the first dawning of philosophy. Addison's Spectator.

4. To light on; to meet with.
Far off he wonders what them makes so glad:
Or Bacchus's merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad. Spektator.

INVENTER. n. f. [from inventer, French.]
1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.
As a translator, he was just; as an inventer, he was rich. Garrick.

2. A forger.
INVENTION. n. f. [from invention, French; inventio, Latin.]
1. Fiction.
O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention! Shakep. H. V. Prol.

By improving what was writ before,
Invention labours less, but judgment more. Recommen.

Invention is a kind of muse, which, being possessed of the other advantages common to her sisters, and being warmed by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest. Dryden.

The chief excellence of Virgil is judgment, of Homer is invention. Pope.

2. Discovery.
Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called ductus salivales. Ray on the Creation.

3. Excogitation; act of producing something new.
Mine is th' invention of the charming lyre;
Sweet notes and heav'nly numbers I inspire. Dryden.

4. Forgery.
We hear our bloody cousins, not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention. Shakep. Macbeth.

If thou can't accuse,
Do it without invention suddenly. Shakep. Henry VI.

5. The thing invented.
The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial inventions. Stany.

Th' invention all admir'd; and each how he
To be th' inventor mis'd, so easy it seem'd
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton's Parad. Lost.

INVENTIVE. adj. [from inventif, Fr. from invent.] Quick at contrivance; ready at expedients; having the power of fiction.
Those have the inventive heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters. Alban's Schoolmaster.

As he had an inventive brain, so there never lived any man that believed better thereof, and of himself. Ray.

Reason, remembrance, wit, inventive art,
No nature, but immortal, can impart. Denham.

That inventive head
Her fatal image from the temple drew,
The sleeping guardians of the castle flew. Dryden.

The inventive god, who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart. Dryden.

INVENTOR.

INV

INVENTOR. n. f. [from inventor, Latin.]
1. A finder out of something new.
We have the statue of your Columbus; that discovered the West Indies, also the inventor of ships: your Monk, that was the inventor of ordnance, and of gunpowder. Bacon.

Studious they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare,
Unmindful of their maker. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be the inventor mis'd.
Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author and inventor, and the reader led into a belief that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterb.

2. A contriver; a framer. In an ill sense.
In this upshot, purposes mistook, Fall'n on th' inventor's head. Shakep. Hamlet.

INVENTORIAL. adv. [from inventory, whence perhaps inventorial.] In manner of an inventory.
To divide inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetick of memory. Shakepeare's Hamlet.

INVENTORY. n. f. [from inventaire, French; inventarium, Latin.] An account or catalogue of moveables.
I found,
Forlooth, an inventory, thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate. Shakep. H. VIII.

The leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance: our sufferings is a gain to them. Shakepeare's Coriolanus.

Who'er looks,
For themselves dare not go, o'er Cheapside books,
Shall find their wardrobe's inventory. Donne.

It were of much consequence to have such an inventory of nature, wherein, as on the one hand, nothing should be wanting, so nothing repeated on the other. Grew's Musaeum.

In Persia the daughters of Eve are reckoned in the inventory of their goods and chattels; and it is usual, when a man sells a bale of silk, to tols half a dozen women into the bargain. Spektator.

He gave me an inventory of her goods and estate. Spektator.

TO INVENTORY. v. a. [from inventor, Fr.] To register; to place in a catalogue.
I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and useful labell'd to my will. Shakep. Twelfth Night.

A man looks on the love of his friend as one of the richest possessions: the philosopher thought friends were to be inventoried as well as goods. Gov. of the Tongue.

INVENTRESS. n. f. [from inventrix, Fr. from inventor.] A female that invents.
The arts, with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified. Burnet.

Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiasm, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds. Dryden.

INVERSE. adj. [from inverse, Fr. inversus, Latin.] Inverted; reciprocal: opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third, as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.
Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter, and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance. Garrick.

INVERSION. n. f. [from inversion, Fr. inversio, Latin.]
1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last.
If he speaks truth, it is upon design, and a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

'Tis just the inversion of an act of parliament; your lordship first sign'd it, and then it was passed amongst the lords and commons. Dryden.

2. Change of place, so as that each takes the room of the other.
TO INVERT. v. a. [from invert, Latin.]
1. To turn upside down; to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.
With fate inverted, shall I humbly woo?
And some proud prince, in wild Numidia born,
Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn? Waller.

So long delays her flow'rs to bear,
And Winter storms invert the year. Dryden.

Poetry and oratory omit things essential, and invert times and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light. Watts.

2. To place the last first.
Yes, every poet is a fool;
By demonstration Ned can show it:
Happy, could Ned's inverted rule
Prove every fool to be a poet. Prior.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to imbezzele. Instead of this convert or invert is now commonly used.

INV

Solyman charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies. Kneller's History of the Turks.

INVERTEDLY. adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.
Placing the forepart of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landkip of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye. Denham's Physico-Theology.

TO INVEST. v. a. [from investir, Fr. investio, Latin.]
1. To dress; to clothe; to array. When it has two accusatives it has in or with before the thing.
Their gesture sad,
Invest in lank lean cheeks and war-worn coats,
Presented them unto the gazing moon,
So many horrid ghosts. Shakep. Henry V.

Thou with a mantle didst invest Milton.

The rising world of waters.
Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;
Invest them with thy loveliest smiles, put on Thy choicest looks. Denham's Sophy.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.
When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make places of publick resort, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

After the death of the other archbishop he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth. Clarend.

The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with publick authority. Atterb.

3. To adorn; to grace.
Honour must,
Not accompanied, invest him only;
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deservers. Shakepeare's Macbeth.

The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engross'd
The canker'd heaps of strong-achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakepeare.

Some great potentate,
Or of the thrones above; such majesty Invest him coming. Milt. Parad. Lost.

4. To confer; to give.
If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it invests a right of government. Bacon.

5. To inclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.
INVESTIENT. adj. [from investiens, Latin.] Covering; clothing.

INVESTIGATION. n. f. [from investigation, Fr. investigatio, Latin.]
1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.
Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetick or analytick. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought Investigation calm, whose silent powers Command the world. Thomson's Summer.

2. Examination.
Your travels I hear much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories: I mean no more translations, but something domestick, fit for my own country. Pope to Swift.

INVESTITURE. n. f. [French.]
1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.
He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Raleigh's Essays.

2. The act of giving possession.
INVESTMENT. n. f. [from invest and vestment.] Dress; cloaths; garment; habit.
Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
Not of that die which their investments shew. Shakep. Ham. You,

INV

INV

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose fee is by a civil peace maintained,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you to ill translate yourself,
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war? Shak. H. IV.
INVE/TERACY. n. f. [inveteratus, Latin.]
1. Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

The inveteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them. Addison.
2. [In physick.] Long continuance of a disease.

INVE/TERATE. adj. [inveteratus, Latin.]
1. Old; long established.

The custom of Christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing; the very inveterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could show some higher law, some law of Scripture, to the contrary. Hooker.

It is an inveterate and received opinion, that cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exacerate it. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Obtinate by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit; but it must be a long inveterate course and custom of finning, that at length produces and ends in such a cursed effect. South's Sermons.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease. Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow inveterate, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies. Swift.

TO INVE/TERATE. v. a. [inveterer, Fr. invetero, Latin.] To harden or make obstinate by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and inveterated into mens minds. Bacon.

Let not atheists lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inveterated habit. Bentley's Sermons.

INVE/TERATENESS. n. f. [inveteratus, Latin.] Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in the art, so hath the inveterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Neither the inveterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalence of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words. Locke.

INVETERATION. n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.] The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVIDIOUS. adj. [invidiosus, Latin.]

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred. This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes. Broome.

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, these are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals. Swift.

INVIDIOUSLY. adv. [invidiosus, Latin.]

1. Malignantly; enviously.

The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy. Sprat.
2. In a manner likely to provoke hatred.

INVIDIOUSNESS. n. f. [invidiosus, Latin.] Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

TO INVIGORATE. v. a. [in vigour, Latin.] To endue with vigour; to strengthen; to animate; to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the finifer side, which, dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate. Brown.

I have lived in a reign when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, or giving them their proper course, assumed a power of dispensing with them. Addison.

No one can enjoy health, without he feel a lightness and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action. Spectator.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be, unless fed, invigorated, and animated by a principle of universal charity. Atterbury's Sermons.

Gentle warmth

Discloses well the earth's all teeming womb,

Invigorating tender feeds. Phillips.

INVIGORATION. n. f. [invigorate, Latin.]

1. The act of invigorating.

INV

2. The state of being invigorated.

The spirit remains invincible. Milton.

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible error, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgment. Locke.

If an atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with his insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have held out a thousand years in a perpetual debauch. Bentley's Sermons.

INVINCIBLENESS. n. f. [invincibilis, Latin.] Unconquerableness; insuperableness.

INVINCIBLY. adv. [invincibilis, Latin.] Insuperably; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause; And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done Milton.

INVINCIBLY. adv. [invincibilis, Latin.] Insuperably; unconquerably.

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impeded, to apply them to their benefit. Dec. of Pity.

INVIO/ABLE. adj. [inviolabile, French; inviolabilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account

To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep

This place inviolable, and these from harm. Milt. Par. Lost.

In vain did nature's wife command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men prophane,

Invade the inviolable main;

Th' eternal fens overlap;

And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high

His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!

Invulnerable pow'rs! ador'd with dread, Dryden's Zen.

Be all of you adjur'd.

This birthright, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and invulnerable. Locke.

2. Not to be broken.

The prophet David thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of invulnerable amity. Hooker.

See, see, they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,

As if they vow'd some league invulnerable. Shakespeare, H. VI.

3. Insuperable; not to be hurt or wound.

Th' invulnerable faints

In cubick phalanx firm advance d'intire. Milton.

The true profession of Christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Sprat's Sermons.

Meet acquaintance you have none: you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

INVIO/LATE. adj. [inviolatus, Fr. inviolatus, Lat.] Unhurt; uninjured; unprofaned; unpolluted; unbroken.

His fortune of arms was still inviolate. Bacon's H. VII.

But let inviolate truth be always dear

To thee; even before friendship, truth prefer. Denham.

If the past

Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds

Nature has seal'd between us, which though I

Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd inviolate: Denham's Sophy.

I beg thy pardon.

My love your claim inviolate secures;

'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours. Dryden's Aureng.

In all the changes of his doubtful state,

His truth, like heav'n's, was kept inviolate. Dryden.

INVIOUS. adj. [invius, Latin.] Impassable; untrodden.

If nothing can oppugn his love,

And virtue invious ways can prove,

What may not he confide to do, Hudibras.

That brings both love and virtue too.

INVISIB/LITY. n. f. [invisibilis, Fr. from invisibilis, Latin.] The state of being invisible; imperceptibleness to sight.

They may be demonstrated to be innumerable, substantiating their finalness for the reason of their invisibleness. Ray.

INVISIBLE. adj. [invisibilis, Fr. invisibilis, Latin.] Not perceptible by the sight; not to be seen.

He was invisible that hurt me so;

And none invisible, but spirits, can go. Sidney.

The threaten falls,

Borne with th' invisible and creeping wind,

Drew the huge bottoms to the furrow'd sea. Shakespeare, H. V.

INU

*'Tis wonderful,

That an invisible instinct should frame them

To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untaught, Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

Civility not seen from others.

To us invisible, or dimly seen, Milton.

In these thy lowest works.

He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen. Tillotson.

It seems easier to make one's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself. Locke.

INVISIBLY. adv. [invisibilis, Latin.] Imperceptibly to the sight.

Age by degrees invisibly doth creep,

Nor do we seem to die, but fall asleep. Denham.

TO INVISCATE. v. a. [in viscus, Latin.] To lime; to intangle in glutinous matter.

The camelion's food being flies, it hath in the tongue a mucous and slimy extremity, whereby, upon a sudden emission, it inviscates and intangleth those insects. Brown.

INVITATION. n. f. [invitatio, Fr. invitatio, Lat.] The act feathers, and causing their filaments to cohere. Ray.

INUNDATION. n. f. [inundatio, French; inundatio, Latin.]

1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, says

Cowley, implies less than deluge.

Her father counts it dangerous,

That she should give her sorrow so much way;

And in his wisdom hastes our marriage,

To stop the inundation of her tears. Shak. Rom. and Juliet.

The same inundation was not past forty foot in most places;

so that although it destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

All fountains of the deep,

Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp

Beyond all bounds, 'till inundation rise

Above the highest hills. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

This inundation unto the Egyptians happeneth when it is Winter unto the Ethiopians. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Your care about your banks infers a fear

Of threatening floods, and inundations near. Dryden.

The hero next assail'd proud Doway's head,

And spite of confluent inundations spread

With unexampled valour did succeed. Blackmore.

No swelling inundation hides the grounds, Gay.

But crystal currents glide within their bounds.

 A man, who has digested all the fathers, lets a pure English divine go cheek by jole with him. Collier on Pride.
 Your wan complexion, and your thin joles, father. Dryden.
 2. The head of a fish.
 A salmon's belly, Helluo, was thy fate;
 The doctor call'd, declares all help too late:
 Mercy! cries Helluo, mercy on my soul!
 Is there no hope? alas! then bring the jole. Pope's
 Red-peckled trout, the salmon's silver jole,
 The jointed lobster, and uncally foale. Gay's Trivia.
 To JOLE. v. a. [from jole, the head.] To beat the head against any thing; to clash with violence. Howe's

JOR

- Howe'er their hearts are sever'd in religion, their heads are both one: they may jolt horns together like any deer i' the herd. Shakespeare.
 The tortoises envied the easiness of the frogs, till they saw them jolted to pieces and devoured for want of a buckler. L'Es.
 JO'LLY. adv. [from jolly.] In a disposition to noisy mirth.
 The goodly empress, jolly inclin'd,
 Is to the welcome bearer wond'rous kind. Dryden's Pers.
 JO'LLIMENT. n. f. [from jolly.] Mirth; merriment; gaiety.
 Matter of mirth enough, though there were none,
 She could devise, and thousand ways invent
 To feed her foolish humour, and vain jolliment. Fa. Queen.
 JO'LLINESS. n. f. [from jolly.]
 JO'LLITY. n. f. [from jolly.]
 1. Gaiety; elevation of spirit.
 He with a proud jollity commanded him to leave that quarrel only for him, who was only worthy to enter into it. Sidney.
 2. Merriment; festivity.
 With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenser.
 There shall these pairs of faithful lovers be Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity. Shakespeare.
 The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
 All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
 To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton's Parad. Lost.
 Good men are never so surpris'd as in the midst of their jollity, nor so fatally overtaken and caught as when the table is made the snare. Soult's Sermons.
 With branches we the fanes adorn, and waste
 In jollity the day ordain'd to be the last. Dryden's An.
 My heart was filled with melancholy to see several dropping in the midst of mirth and jollity. Addison's Spectator.
 JO'LLY. adj. [from jolly, French; jovialis, Latin.]
 1. Gay; merry; airy; cheerful; lively; jovial.
 Our lusty English. Shakespeare, King John.
 O nightingale!
 Thou with fresh hope the lover's heart do'st fill,
 While the jolly hours lead on propitious May. Milton.
 All my griefs to this are jolly;
 Nought so sad as melancholy. Burton.
 Ev'n ghosts had learn'd to groan;
 But free from punishment, as free from sin,
 The shades liv'd jolly, and without a king. Dryden's Juven.
 This gentle knight, inspir'd by jolly May,
 Forsook his easy couch at early day. Dryden.
 A shepherd now along the plain he roves,
 And with his jolly pipe delights the groves. Prior.
 2. Plump; like one in high health.
 He catches at an apple of Sodom, which though it may entertain his eye with a florid, jolly white and red, yet, upon the touch, it shall fill his hand only with stench and foulness. Soult.
 To JOLT. v. n. [I know not whence derived.] To shake as a carriage on rough ground.
 In such a contrivance every little unevenness of the ground will cause such a jolting of the chariot as to hinder the motion of its sails. Wilkins.
 Violent motion, as jolting in a coach, may be used in this case. Arbutnot on Diet.
 A coach and six horses is the utmost exercise you can bear, and how glad would you be, if it could wait you in the air to avoid jolting. Swift to Gay.
 To JOLT. v. a. To shake one as a carriage does.
 JOLT. n. f. [from the verb.] Shock; violent agitation.
 The symptoms are, bloody water upon a sudden jolt or violent motion. Arbutnot on Diet.
 The first jolt had like to have shaken me out; but afterwards the motion was easy. Gulliver's Travels.
 JO'LTHEAD. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A great head; a dolt; a blockhead.
 Pie on thee, jolthead, thou can'st not read. Shakespeare.
 Had he been a dwarf, he had scarce been a reasonable creature; for he must then have either had a jolthead, and so there would not have been body and blood enough to supply his brain with spirits; or he must have had a small head, and so there would not have been brain enough for his business. Grew.
 JO'NGUILL. n. f. [from jonquille, French.] A species of daffodil.
 The flowers of this plant, of which there are single and double kinds, are greatly esteemed for their strong sweet scent, though few ladies can bear the smell of them, it being so powerful as to overcome their spirits. Miller.
 Nor gradual bloom is wanting,
 Nor hyacinths of purest virgin white,
 Low bent and blushing inward; nor jonquilles
 Of potent fragrance. Thomson's Spring.
 JO'RDEN. n. f. [from Jordon, and ben, receptaculum.] A pot.
 They will allow us ne'er a jorden, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamberly breeds fleas like a loach. Shak.
 This China jorden let the chief o'ercome
 Replenish, not ingloriously at home. Pope's Dunciad.
 The copper-pot can boil milk, heat porridge, hold small-beer, or, in case of necessity, serve for a jorden. Swift.
 JO'SEPH'S Flowers. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

JOU

- To JO'STLE. v. a. [from joster, French.] To jostle; to rush against.
 JO'. n. f. [from jara.] A point; a title; the least quantity of signable.
 As superfluous flesh did rot,
 Amendment ready still at hand did wait,
 To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
 That soon in him was left no one corrupt jot. Fa. Queen.
 Go, Eros, send his treasure after, do it;
 Detain no jot, I charge thee. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopat.
 Let me not stay a jot from dinner; go, get it ready. Shakespeare.
 This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;
 Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heav'n. Shakespeare.
 This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
 The words expressly are a pound of flesh. Shakespeare.
 I argue not
 Against heav'n's hand, or will; nor bate one jot
 Of heart or hope; but still bear up and steer Right onwards. Milton.
 You might, with every jot as much justice, hang me up, because I'm old, as beat me because I'm impotent. L'Esrange.
 A man may read the discourses of a very rational author, and yet acquire not one jot of knowledge. Locke.
 The final event will not be one jot less the consequence of our own choice and actions, for God's having from all eternity foreseen and determined what that event shall be. Rogers.
 JO'VIAL. adj. [from jovial, French; jovialis, Latin.]
 1. Under the influence of Jupiter.
 The fixed stars are astrologically differenced by the planets, and are esteemed martial or jovial, according to the colours whereby they answer these planets. Brown's Vulg. Err.
 2. Gay; airy; merry.
 My lord, seek o'er your rugged looks,
 Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests. Shakespeare, Macb.
 Our jovial star reign'd at his birth. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.
 Some men, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company, into which they come, to be sad and ill-disposed; and contrariwise, others of a jovial nature dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon's Natural History.
 His odes are some of them panegyric, others moral, the rest jovial or bacchanalian. Dryden.
 Perhaps the jest that charm'd the sprightly crowd,
 And made the jovial table laugh so loud,
 To some false notion ow'd its poor pretence. Prior.
 JO'VIALLY. adv. [from jovial.] Merrily; gaily.
 JO'VIALNESS. n. f. [from jovial.] Gaiety; merriment.
 JO'VIALANCE. n. f. [from jovial, French.] Jollity; merriment; festivity.
 Colin, my dear, when shall it please thee sing,
 As thou wert wont, songs of some jovialance;
 Thy muse too long slumbereth in forrowing,
 Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance. Spenser.
 JO'URNAL. adj. [from journal, French; giornale, Italian.] Daily; quotidian. Out of use.
 Now 'gan the golden Phœbus for to sleep
 His fiery face in billows of the West,
 And his faint steeds water'd in ocean deep,
 Whilst from their journal labours they did rest. Fa. Queen.
 Ere twice the sun has made his journal greeting
 To th' under generation, you shall find Your safety manifested. Shakespeare, Meas. for Meas.
 So sick I am not, yet I am not well;
 But not so citizen a wanton, as
 To seem to die ere sick; so, please you, leave me:
 Stick to your journal course; the breach of custom
 Is breach of all. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
 JO'URNAL. n. f. [from journal, French; giornale, Italian.]
 1. A diary; an account kept of daily transactions.
 Edward kept a most judicious journal of all the principal passages of the affairs of his estate. Hayward on Edw. VI.
 Time has destroyed two noble journals of the navigation of Hanno and of Hamilcar. Arbutnot on Coins.
 2. Any paper published daily.
 JO'URNALIST. n. f. [from journal.] A writer of journals.
 JO'URNEY. n. f. [from journee, French.]
 1. The travel of a day.
 When Duncan is asleep,
 Whereto the rather shall this day's hard journey
 Soundly invite him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 Scarce the fun
 Hath finish'd half his journey. Milton.
 2. Travel by land; a voyage or travel by sea.
 So are the horses of the enemy,
 In general journey bated and brought low. Shakespeare, H. IV.
 Before the light of the gospel, mankind travelled like people in the dark, without any certain prospect of the end of their journey, or of the way that led to it. Rogers.
 He for the promis'd journey bids prepare
 The smooth hair'd horses and the rapid car. Pope's Odyssey.
 3. Passage from place to place.
 Some, having a long journey from the upper regions, would float up and down a good while. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

JOY

Light of the world, the ruler of the year,
Still as thou dost thy radiant journies run,
Through every distant climate own,
That in fair Albion thou hast seen
The greatest prince, the brightest queen. Prior.
To JOURNÉE. v. n. [from the noun.] To travel; to pass from place to place.

Gentlemen of good esteem
Are journying to salute the emperor. Shakespeare.
We are journying unto the place, of which the Lord said,
I will give it you. Numb. x. 29.
Make the two trumpets, that thou mayest use them for the journying of the camps. Numb. x. 2.

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love defend, and journy down the hill;
Not panting after growing beauties, so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.
I have journyed this morning, and it is now the heat of the day; therefore your lordship's discourses had need content my ears very well, to make them intreat my eyes to keep open.
Bacon's Holy War.

Over the tent a cloud
Shall rest by day, a fiery gleam by night,
Save when they journy. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xii.
Having heated his body by journying, he took cold upon the ground. Wisehart's Surgery.
JOURNÉMAN. n. f. [journée, a day's work, Fr. and man.] A hired workman.

They were called journymen that wrought with others by the day, though now by statute it be extended to those likewise that covenant to work in their occupation with another by the year. Cowel.

Players have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journymen had made men, and not made them well. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

I intend to work for the court myself, and will have journymen under me to furnish the rest of the nation. Addison.
Says Frog to Bull, this old rogue will take the management of the young lord's business into his hands: in that case what must become of us and our families? We must starve or turn journymen to old Lewis Baboon. Arbutnot's John Bull.

JOURNÉWORK. n. f. [journée, French, and work.] Work performed for hire.

See how your soldier wears his cage
Of iron, like the captive Turk,
And as the guerdon of his rage!

See how your glimmering peers do lurk,
Or at the best work journywork. Cleveland.

Did no committee sit, where he Might cut out journywork for thee?
And set thee a task with subordination,
To stitch up sale and sequestration. Hudibras.

Her family she was forced to hire out at journywork to her neighbours. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

JOUST. n. f. [joust, French.] Tilt; tournament; mock fight.
It is now written less properly joust.
Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights
At joust and tournament. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

To JOUST. v. n. [jouster, French.] To run in the tilt.
All who fence
Jousted in Aspromont or Montalban. Milton.

JO'WLER. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from bowler, as making a hideous noise after the game, whom the rest of the pack follow as their leader.] A kind of hunting dog or beagle.
See him drag his feeble legs about,
Like hounds ill-coupled: jowler lugs him still. Dryden.

JO'WTER. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from jowler.]
Plenty of fish is vented to the fish-drivers, whom we call jowters. Carew.

JOY. n. f. [joye, French; gioia, Italian.]
1. The passion produced by any happy accident; gladness; exultation.

Joy is a delight of the mind, from the consideration of the present, or assured approaching possession of a good. Locke.
There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakespeare.

There should not be such heaviness in their destruction, as shall be joy over them that are persuaded to salvation. 2 Esdr.
The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. Saath's Sermons.

2. Gaiety; merriment; festivity.
The roofs with joy resound;
And hymen, to hymen, rung around. Dryden.

3. Happiness; felicity.
My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish. Shakespeare.

Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine:
I drink to the general joy of the whole table. Shakespeare.

JOY

Almeyda smiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conquest. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

The bride,
Lovely herself, and lovely by her side,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace,
Came glitt'ring like a star, and took her place:
Her heav'nly form beheld, all with'd her joy;
And little wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ. Dry.

4. A term of fondness.
Now our joy,
Although our last, yet not our least young love,
What say you? Shakesf. King Lear.
To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy, when glad occasion fits,
And mask in mirth like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to sorrow flits,
I will make my woes a tragedy. Spenser.

I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakesf. H. VI.
He will joy over thee with fingering. Zeph. iii. 17.
I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. Heb. iii. 18.

Exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit was refreshed by you. 2 Cor. vii. 13.
They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament. Fairf.
No man imparteth his joys to his friends, but he joyneth the more; and no man imparteth his griefs, but he giveth the less. Bacon's Essays.

Well then, my soul, joy in the midst of pain;
Thy Christ, that conquer'd hell, shall from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own justice with his love. Watson.

Joy thou,
In what he gives to thee this paradise,
And thy fair Eve. Milton's Par. Lost, b. viii.
Their cheerful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleasure's flav'ry they are free. Denham.

To JOY. v. a.
1. To congratulate; to entertain kindly.
Like us they love or hate; like us they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe. Prior.

2. To gladden; to exhilarate.
She went to Pamela, meaning to delight her eyes and joy her thoughts with the conversation of her beloved sister. Sidney.

My soul was joy'd in vain;
For angry Neptune rous'd the raging main. Pope.
3. [Jour de, French.] To enjoy; to have happy possession.

Let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love. Shakesf. Tit. Andr.
I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,
Yet willingly chose rather death with thee. Milton.

Th' utterer joy'd not long
His ill-got crown. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

JOYANCE. n. f. [joiant, old French.] Gaiety; festivity.
Bring home with you the glory of her gain;
With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenser.

There him rests in riotous suffiance,
Of all his gladfulness and kingly joyance. Spenser.

JOYFUL. adj. [joy and full.]
1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.
They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings viii. 66.

My soul shall be joyful in my God.
2. Sometimes it has of before the cause of joy.
Six brave companions from each ship we lost:
With sails outspread we fly th' unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life. Pope's Odyssey.

JOYFULLY. adj. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.
If we no more meet 'till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu. Shakesf. H. V.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to flee:
With such alacrity they bore away.
As if to praise them all the states stood by. Dryden.

The good Christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Wake.

JOYFULNESS. n. f. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.
Thou servest not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things. Deutr.

JOYLESS. adj. [from joy.]
1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.
A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless. Shakesf. R. III.

With

IRE

With down-cast eyes the joyless victor sat;
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below;
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryd. Alexander's Feast.

2. It has sometimes of before the object.
With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest:
Forlakes his food, and pining for the lass,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grass. Dryd.

3. Giving no pleasure.
A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad. Shakesf. Tit. And.
Here love his golden shafts employs; here lights
His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd, Casual fruition. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession. Deacy of Pity.

He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him. Addison.

JOYOUS. adj. [joyeux, French.]
1. Glad; gay; merry.

Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my falser friend did no less joyous deem. Fa. Queen.

Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs Whisper'd it. Milton.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature stung, renew their love.
Fast by her flow'ry bank the fons of Arcas, Fav'rites of heav'n, with happy care protect Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave. Prior.

2. Giving joy.
They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round. F. Queen.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.
Round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should gudge our happy end, and wish it theirs. Dryden.

IRACUNDA. n. f. [An Indian plant.]
Iracundia is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, which is brought from Peru: the other sort is a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown, or blackish colour on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brasils.

The grey ought to be preferred in medicinal use, because the brown, being stronger, is apt to operate more roughly. Iracundia was in the middle of the last century first brought into Europe, and became celebrated for the cure of dysenteries, a virtue discovered in it by the Indians; but after a few years it sunk into oblivion, being given in two large doses.
Hill's Mat. Med.

IRASCIBLE. adj. [irascibilis, low Latin; irascible, French.]
Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the conspicuous distractions the crasis of the liver. Brown.
I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet. Arbutnot on Aliments.

We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Digby to Pope.

IRE. n. f. [ira, Latin.] Anger; rage; passionate hatred.
She lik'd not his desire;
Fain would be free, but dreaded parents ire. Sidney.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not flake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shak. H. VI.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton's Par. Lost.

The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only just object of his ira. Milton's Par. Lost.

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
'Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire. Dryden.

IRIFUL. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.
The iriful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encounter'd. Shakesf. H. VI.

By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the iriful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shakesf. Henry VI.

There learn'd this maid of arms the iriful guise. Fairfax.
In midst of all the dome misfortune sat,
And gloomy discontent and fell debate,
And madly laughing in his iriful mood. Dryden.

IRIFULLY. adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

IRO

IRIS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The rainbow.
Beside the solar iris, which God shewed unto Noah, there is another lunar, whose efficient is the moon. Brown.

2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.
When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breadth of the interior iris 2 gr. 10'; and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton's Opt.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.
4. The flower-de-luce.

Iris all hues, roses and jessamine. Milton.
To IRK. v. a. [yrk, work, islandick.] This word is used only imperfonally; it irks me; mibi pœna est, it gives me pain; or,
I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the Accidence say, tædet, it irketh.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakespeare.

It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd. Shakesf. H. VI.
IRKSOME. adj. [from irk.] Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tiresome; unpleasing.

I know she is an irksome brawling scold. Shakespeare.
Since that thou can't talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure. Shak. As you like it.

Where he may likeliest find
Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours, 'till his great chief return. Milton.

For not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd. Milton.

There is nothing so irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words. Addison's Spectator.

Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body. Swift.

IRKSOMELY. adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.
IRKSOMENESS. n. f. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wear-isomeness.

IRON. n. f. [haiern, Welsh; irren, iren, Saxon; iron, Erse.]
1. A metal common to all parts of the world, plentiful in most, and of a small price, though superior in real value to the dearest. Though the lightest of all metals, except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and, when pure, naturally malleable, but in a less degree than gold, silver, lead, or copper: when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, in which it is called cast iron, it is scarce malleable; and the most ductile iron, heated and suddenly quenched in cold water, loses much of this quality. Iron is more capable of rust than any other metal, is very sonorous, and requires the strongest fire of all the metals to melt it, and is with difficulty amalgamated with mercury. Most of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. It consists of a vitriolic salt, a vitrifiable earth, and a peculiar bituminous matter. The specific gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone.
Iron is not only soluble in all the stronger acids, but even in common water. Pure iron has been found in some places but very rarely. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakesf. Jul. Cæs.

If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Numb. xxxv. 16.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a load-stone, and a power to be so drawn is a part of that of iron.

In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates, placed parallel to each other. Locke.
There are incredible quantities of iron slag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward on Fossils.

Iron stone lies in strata. Woodward on Fossils.
I treated of making iron work, and steel work in general.
Moxon's Mech. Exer.

2. Any instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron.

Irons of a doits, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shakesf. Coriolanus.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Shak. R. III.

His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in irons. Pf.
Can't thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish-spears? Jeb xli. 7.

For this your locks in paper-durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.
The iron entered into his soul. Psalms. Common Prayer.

IRON.

IRON. adj.
1. Made of iron.
In iron walls they deem'd me not secure. Shakeſp. H. VI.
Get me an iron crow, and bring it ſtraight Unto my cell. Shakeſp. Romeo and Juliet.
Some are of an iron red, ſhining, and polite; others not polite, but as if powdered with iron duſt. Woodward.
Poll-cats and weefels do a great deal of injury to warrens:
the way of taking them is in butches, and iron traps. Mortim.
2. Reſembling iron in colour.
A piece of ſtone of a dark iron grey colour, but in ſome parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodward on Foſſils.
Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright. Woodw.
3. Harſh; ſevere; rigid; miſerable; calamitous: as, the iron age, for an age of hardſhip and wickedneſs. Theſe ideas may be found more or leſs in all the following examples.
Three vigorous virgins, waiting ſtill behind,
Aſſiſt the throne of th' iron ſcepter'd king. Craſhaw.
O ſad virgin, that thy power
Might bid the foul of Orpheus ſing
Such notes as warbled to the ſtrings,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did ſeek. Milton.
In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a ſtain of diſhonour. Rowe.
Jove cruſh the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the ſcourge of God. Pope's Odeſſey.
4. Indifſoluble; unbroken.
Raſh Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeaſurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his ſurfeit by irriguous ſleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron ſleep oppreſs. Phillips.
5. Hard; impenetrable.
I will converſe with iron witted fools,
And unreſpective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with conſid'rate eyes. Shakeſp. R. III.
To IRON. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To ſmooth with an iron.
2. To ſhackle with irons.
IRONICAL. adj. [ironique, Fr. from irony.] Expreſſing one thing and meaning another; ſpeaking by contraries.
In this fallacy may be compris'd all ironical miſtakes, or expreſſions receiving inverted ſignifications. Brown.
I take all your ironical civilities in a literal ſenſe, and ſhall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.
IRONICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the uſe of irony.
Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wiſeſt man of Greece, which he would turn from himſelf ironically, ſaying, there could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wiſe, and knew it; and others were not wiſe, and knew it not. Bacon.
The dean, ironically grave,
Still ſhunn'd the fool, and laſt'd the knave. Swift.
IRONMONGER. n. ſ. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.
IRONWOOD. n. ſ. A kind of wood extremely hard, and ſo ponderous as to ſink in water. It grows in America. Rob. Cruſo.
IRONWORT. n. ſ. [sideritis, Latin.] It is a plant with a labiate flower, conſiſting of one leaf, whoſe upper lip or beard is divided into three parts: out of the flower-cup riſes the pointal, attended, as it were, by four embryos; which afterward turn to ſo many oblong ſeeds, ſhut up in an hulk, which before was the flower-cup: to theſe marks muſt be added, the flowers growing in whorles at the wings of the leaves, which are cut like a creſt, and differ from the other leaves of the plant. Mill.
IRONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.
The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary; it is not ſtrange if the irony chains have more ſolidity than the contemplative. Hammond's Fundamentals.
Some ſprings of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriollick ſalts, diſſolve the body of one metal, ſuppoſe iron, put into the ſpring; and depoſite, in lieu of the iron particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward on Foſſils.
IRONY. n. ſ. [ironie, Fr. leſionia.] A mode of ſpeech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.
So grave a body, upon ſo ſolemn an occaſion, ſhould not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.
IRRADIANCE. n. ſ. [irradiance, French; irradiatio, Latin.]
IRRADIANCE. n. ſ. [irradiance, French; irradiatio, Latin.]
1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any object.
The principal affection is its tranſlucency; the irradiancy and ſparkling, found in many gems, is not diſcoverable in this. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. Beams of light emitted.
Love not the heavenly ſpirits? Or do they mix Irradiance! virtual, or immediate touch? Milt. Par. Loſt.
To IRRADIATE. v. a. [irradiare, Latin.]
1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.
When he thus perceives that theſe opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffuſion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby on Bodies.

IRR

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; ſuch an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it deſcends. South.
2. To enlighten intellectually; to illumine; to illuminate.
Celeſtial light.
Shine inward, and the mind through all her pow'rs Irradiate; there plant eyes: all miſt from thence Purge and diſperſe. Milton's Paradise Loſt, b. iii.
3. To animate by heat or light.
Ethereal or ſolar heat muſt diſtill, influence, irradiate, and put thoſe more ſimple parts of matter into motion. Hale.
4. To decorate with ſhining ornaments.
No weeping orphan ſaw his father's ſtore
Our ſhrines irradiate, or imblaze the floor. Pope.
IRRADIATION. n. ſ. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiare.]
1. The act of emitting beams of light.
If light were a body it ſhould drive away the air, which is likewiſe a body, wherever it is admitted; for within the whole ſphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found. Digby on Bodies.
The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or anſwerably unto the propagation of light; but herein a tranſmiſſion is made materially from ſome parts, and ideally from every one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
2. Illumination; intellectual light.
The means of derivation and immediate union of theſe intellectual objects to the underſtanding, are ſometimes divine and ſupernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.
IRRA'TIONAL. adj. [irrationalis, Latin.]
1. Void of reaſon; void of underſtanding; without the diſcourſive faculty.
Thus began
Outrage from lifeleſs things; but diſcord firſt,
Daughter of ſin, among th' irra'tional
Death introduc'd. Milton's Paradise Loſt.
He hath eat'n, and lives,
And knows, and ſpeaks, and reaſons and diſcerns;
Irra'tional! till then. Milt. Paradise Loſt, b. ix.
2. Abſurd; contrary to reaſon.
Since the brain is only a part tranſmittent, and that humours oſt are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from ſo irra'tional an application. Harvey on Conſumption.
I ſhall quietly ſubmit, not wiſhing ſo irra'tional a thing as that every body ſhould be deceived. Pope.
IRRA'TIONALITY. n. ſ. [from irra'tional.] Want of reaſon.
IRRA'TIONALLY. adv. [from irra'tional.] Without reaſon;
abſurdly.
IRRECLAIMABLE. adj. [in and reclaimable.] Not to be reclaimed; not to be changed to the better.
As for obſtinate, irreclaimable, profeſſed enemies, we muſt expect their calamities will continue. Addiſon's Freeholder.
IRRECONCILABLE. adj. [irreconcilable, Fr. in and reconcilable.]
1. Not to be reconciled; not to be appeated.
Wage eternal war,
Irreconcilable to our grand foe. Milton.
A weak unequal faction may animate a government; but when it grows equal in ſtrength, and irreconcilable by animosity, it cannot end without ſome criſis. Temple.
There are no factions, though irreconcilable to one another, that are not united in their affection to you. Dryden.
2. Not to be made conſiſtent. It has with or to.
As he was ſtrictly virtuous himſelf, ſo he always put the beſt conſtruction upon the words and actions of her neighbours, except where they were irreconcilable to the rules of honneſty and decency. Arbutnot's Hiſt. of John Bull.
Since the ſenſe I oppoſe is attended with ſuch groſs irreconcilable abſurdities, I preſume I need not offer any thing farther in ſupport of the one, or in diſproof of the other. Rogers.
This eſſential power of gravitation or attraction is irreconcilable with the atheiſt's own doctrine of a chaos. Bentley.
All that can be tranſmitted from the ſtars is wholly unac-countable, and irreconcilable to any ſyſtem of ſcience. Bentley.
IRRECONCILABLENESS. n. ſ. [from irreconcilable.] Impos-ſibility to be reconciled.
IRRECONCILABLY. adv. [from irreconcilable.] In a manner not admitting reconciliation.
IRRECONCILED. adj. [in and reconciled.] Not atoned.
A ſervant dies in many irreconciled iniquities. Shakeſp. H. V.
IRRECOVERABLE. adj. [in and recoverable.]
1. Not to be regained; not to be reſtored or repaired.
Time, in a natural ſenſe, is irrecoverable: the moment juſt ſped by us, it is impoſſible to recall. Rogers.
2. Not to be remedied.
The irrecoverable loſs of ſo many livings of principal value.
It concerns every man, that would not triſſe away his ſoul, and fool himſelf into irrecoverable miſery, with the greateſt ſeriouſneſs to enquire. Tillotſon's Sermons.
IRRECOVERABLY.

IRR

IRRECOVERABLY. adv. [from irrecoverable.] Beyond recovery; paſt repair.
O dark, dark, dark amid' the blaze of noon;
Irrecoverably dark, total eclipse,
Without all hope of day. Milton's Agonistes.
The credit of the Exchequer is irrecoverably loſt by the laſt breach with the bankers. Temple.
IRREDUCIBLE. adj. [in and reducible.] Not to be brought or reduced.
Theſe obſervations ſeem to argue the corpuscles of air to be irreducible into water. Boyle.
IRREFRAGABILITY. n. ſ. [from irrefragable.] Strength of argument not to be refuted.
IRREFRAGABLE. adj. [irrefragabilis, ſchool Latin; irrefragable, Fr.] Not to be confuted; ſuperior to argumental oppoſition.
Strong and irrefragable the evidences of Chriſtianity muſt be: they who reſiſted them would reſiſt every thing. Atterbury.
The danger of introducing unexperienced men was urged as an irrefragable reaſon for working by flow degrees. Swift.
IRREFRAGABLY. adv. [from irrefragable.] With force above confutation.
That they denied a future ſtate is evident from St. Paul's reaſonings, which are of no force but only on that ſuppoſition, as Origen largely and irrefragably proves. Atterbury.
IRREFUTABLE. adj. [irrefutabilis, Latin.] Not to be overthrown by argument.
IRREGULAR. adj. [irregulier, Fr. irregularis, Latin.]
1. Deviating from rule, cuſtom, or nature.
The am'rous youth
Obtain'd of Venus his deſire, Howe'er irregular his fire. Prior.
2. Immethodical; not confined to any certain rule or order.
This motion ſeems excentric and irregular, yet not well to be reſiſted or quieted. King Charles.
Regular
Then moſt, when moſt irregular they ſeem. Milton.

afford a beginning unto the common opinion. Brown.
As theſe vaſt heaps of mountains are thrown together with ſo much irregularity and confuſion, they form a great variety of hollow bottoms. Addiſon on Italy.
3. Inordinate practice.
Religion is ſomewhat leſs in danger of corruption, while the finner acknowledges the obligations of his duty, and is aſhamed of his irregularities. Rogers's Sermons.
IRREGULARLY. adv. [from irregular.] Without obſervation of rule or method.
Phaeton,
By the wild courſes of his fancy drawn,
From Eaſt to Weſt irregularly hurl'd,
Fiſt ſet on fire himſelf, and then the world. Dryden jun.
Your's is a foul irregularly great,
Which wanting temper, yet abounds with heat. Dryden.
It may give ſome light to thoſe whoſe concern for their little ones makes them ſo irregularly bold as to conſult their own reaſon, in the education of their children, rather than to rely upon old cuſtom. Locke.
To IRREGULATE. v. a. [from in and regula, Latin.] To make irregular; to diſorder.
Its fluctuations are but motions ſubſervient, which winds, ſhelves, and every interjacency irregularates. Brown's Vulg. Err.
IRRELATIVE. adj. [in and relatiuus, Latin.] Having no reference to any thing; ſingle; unconnected.
Separated by the voice of God, things in their ſpecies came out in uncommunicated varieties, and irrelative ſingularities.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
IRRELIGION. n. ſ. [irreligion, Fr. in and religio.] Contempt of religion; impiety.
The weapons with which I combat irreligion are already conſecrated. Dryden.
We behold every inſtance of prophaneneſs and irreligion, not only committed, but defended and gloried in. Rogers.
IRRELIGIOUS. adj. [irreligioux, Fr. in and religioſus.]
1. Contemning religion; impious.
The illu of an ir-religioux Moor. Shakeſp. Tit. Andron.

Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep:
Imprudent! him death's iron sleep oppress. Phillips.

IRRI'SION. n.f. [irrisio, Lat. irrisio, French.] The act of laughing at another.

This person, by his indiscreet and unnatural irrisio, and exposing of his father, incurs his indignation and curse. Woodward's Natural History.

TO IRRITATE. v. a. [irrito, Latin; irriter, French.]

1. To provoke; to tease; to exasperate.

The earl, speaking to the freeholders in imperious language, did not irritate the people. Bacon's Henry VII.

His power at court could not qualify him to go through with that difficult reformation, whilst he had a superior in the church, who, having the reins in his hand, could slacken them according to his own humour and indiscretion, and was thought to be the more remiss to irritate his choleric disposition. Clarendon.

2. To

ISI

2. To fret; to put into motion or disorder by any irregular or unaccustomed contact; to stimulate; to vellicate.

Cold maketh the spirits vigorous, and irritate them. Bacon.

3. To heighten; to agitate; to enforce.

Air, if very cold, irritate the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon.

When they are collected, the heat becometh more violent and irritate, and thereby expelleth sweat. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Rous'd
By dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. Thomson's Summer.

IRITATION. n.f. [irritatio, Latin; irritation, French; from irritare.]

1. Provocation; exasperation.

2. Stimulation; vellication.

Violent affections and irritations of the nerves, in any part of the body, is caused by something acrimonious. Arbutnot.

IRRUP'TION. n.f. [irruption, Fr. irruption, Latin.]

1. The act of any thing forcing an entrance.

I refrain, too suddenly,
To utter what will come at last too soon;
Left evil tidings, with too rude irruption,
Hitting thy aged ear, should pierce too deep. Milton.

There are frequent inundations made in maritime countries by the irruption of the sea. Burnet.

A full and sudden irruption of thick melancholick blood into the heart puts a stop to its pulsation. Harvey.

2. Inroad; burst of invaders into any place.

Notwithstanding the irruptions of the barbarous nations, one can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled. Addison on Italy.

Is. [yr, Saxon. See To Be.]

1. The third person singular of to be: I am, thou art, he is.

He that is of God, heareth God's words. Jer. viii. 47.

Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil; neither is it in them to do good. Jer. x. 5.

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes for my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in fume, and nothing is. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. It is sometimes expressed by 's.

There's some among you have beheld me fighting. Shakespeare.

ISABELLA COLOUR. n.f. [a kind of colour. Answ.]

ISCHIADICK. adj. [ischia, ischia, and ischia, Fr. ischia, Fr. ischia, Latin.] In anatomy, an epithet given to the veins of the foot that terminate in the crural. Harris.

ISCHURY. n.f. [ischuria, ischia and urine; ischuria, Fr. ischuria, Latin.] A stoppage of urine, whether by gravel or other cause.

ISCHURETICK. n.f. [ischuretic, Fr. from ischury.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

ISH. [yr, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality: as, bluish, tending to blue; brighthead, somewhat bright.

2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentile or possessive adjective: as, Swedish, Danish; the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added: as foolish, foolish; man, manly; regue, reguish.

ISICLE. n.f. [More properly icicle, from ice; but ice should rather be written ise; yr, Saxon.] A pendent shoot of ice.

—The moon of Rome; chaste as the isicle
That's cuddled by the frost from purest snow
Hanging on Dian's temple. Shakespeare.

The frosts and snows her tender body spare;
Those are not limbs for isicles to tear. Dryden.

ISINGLASS. n.f. [from ice, or is, and glass; that is, matter congealed into glass; ichthyocolla, Latin.]

Isinglass is a tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue, but cleaner and sweeter. We usually receive it in twisted pieces, of a roundish figure like a staple, which the druggists divide into thin threads like skins, that easily dissolve. The fish from which isinglass is prepared is one of the cartilaginous kind, and a species of sturgeon: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and in its general figure greatly resembles the sturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Bosphorus, the Volga, and many other of the larger rivers of Europe. From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. The greatest quantity of isinglass is made in Russia. It is an excellent agglutinant and strengthener, and often prescribed in gellies and broths. The wine-coopers find it efficacious for clearing wines. Hill's Mat. Med.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incassating diet, as all viscid broths, hartshorn, ivory, and isinglass. Floer.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ISS

ISINGLASS Stone. n.f. This is a fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. It is found in broad masses, composed of a multitude of extremely thin plates or flakes. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Mulcovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. The ancients made their windows of it, instead of glass. It is also sometimes used for glass before pictures, and for horn in lanterns. Hill's Mat. Med.

ISLAND. n.f. [insula, Latin; isola, Italian; ealand, Erse. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple. — And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,
An island shades it from the rolling sea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Some faster world in depth of woods embrac'd,
Some happier island in the wat'ry waste.
Island of bliss! amid' the subject seas. Johnson.

ISLANDER. n.f. [from island. Pronounce iland.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camd.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence. Shakespeare. Othello.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and inhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison's Freeholder.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boisterous as their seas;
The native islanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope's Odyssey.

ISLE. n.f. [isle, French; insula, Latin. Pronounce ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

Is it not an easy matter
To make lord William Haltings of our mind,
For the intalment of this noble duke
In the feat royal of this famous isle? Shakespeare. R. III.

The dreadful fight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,
And how these monsters did disarm an isle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aile, French, from ala, Latin, the aile being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from aile, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or publick building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long founding isles and intermingled graves,
Black melancholy sits. Pope.

ISOPERIMETRICAL. n.f. [isoperimetria, and metron.] In geometry, are such figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISO'SCELES. n.f. [isocèle, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal. Harris.

ISSUE. n.f. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Pf. lxxviii. 20.

Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life. Prov. iv. 23.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been, if that issue of wealth had been stopp'd? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine issues. Shakespeare. Measure for Measure.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

But let the issue correspondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprise. Fairfax.

If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin 'till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South's Sermons.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South's Sermons.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the atheist desires. Bent.

4. Termination;

ISS

4. Termination; conclusion.
He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.
What issue of my love remains for me!
How wild a passion works within my breast!
With what prodigious flames am I possest!
Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Dryden.
5. Sequel deduced from premises.
I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakespeare's Othello.
6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.
This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wise man.
7. Evacuation.
A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. Mat. ix. 20.
8. Progeny; offspring.
O nation miserable!
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Since that the truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurs'd.
Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True paradise, under the Ethiopian line
By Nilus' head. Milton's Paradise Lost.
This old peaceful prince, as heav'n decreed,
Was blest'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryden's En.
The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to confute with this hypothesis. Locke.
9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of suit; sometime for profits of lands or tenements; sometime for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury. Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be questio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be questio facti. Covel.
To ISSUE. v. n. [from the noun; issue, Fr. uſſire, Italian.]
1. To come out; to pass out of any place.
Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Ezek. xlvii. 1.
From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh's History of the World.
Waters issued from a cave. Milton.
Ere Pallas issued from the thunderer's head,
Dulness o'er all posses'd her ancient right. Pope.
2. To make an eruption.
Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakespeare.
See that none hence issue forth a spy.
Haste, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train.
At length there issued, from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Straight issue through the hides assembling swarms. Dryden.
Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope's Odyssey.
3. To proceed as an offspring.
Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings xx. 18.
4. To be produced by any fund.
These altarges issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood. Ayliffe's Parergon.
5. To run out in lines.
It would be tried in pipes, being made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a straight concave again. Bacon's Natural History.
To ISSUE. v. a.
1. To send out; to send forth.
A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense.
If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation. Clarendon.
Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

IT

- In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforseen prevents their care. Dryden.
They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe's Parergon.
ISSUELESS. adj. [from issue.] Without offspring; without descendants.
Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
I have done sin;
For which the heav'n's, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
ISTHMUS. n. s. [from isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.
There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnablely fortified. Sandy's Travels.
The north side of the Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. Brerewood on Languages.
O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet can't not wave nor wind sustain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.
Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it. Stillingfleet.
Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Cruick.
Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.
IT. pronoun. [It, Saxon.]
1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things.
Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bramb. against Hobbs.
Will our great anger learn to stoop to low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.
Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who master art of it. Cowley.
His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flatman.
The time will come, it will, when you shall know
The rage of love. Dryden.
How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.
A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions!
The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabric began to melt. Addison's Freeholder.
If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley's Sermons.
2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.
How is it with our general?
—Even so
As with a man by his own alms impositi'd,
And with his charity slain. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.
It's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
4. It is sometimes expressed by 't'.
He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Hudibras.
The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.
5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis.
If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.
The Lacedemonians, at the straits of Thermopylae, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.
I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.
A mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Addison's Spectator.
Whether the charmer sinner it, or faint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.
6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or rudely to persons.
Let us after him,
Who's care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a perlicks kinsman. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

ITE

- Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shakespeare's King John.
7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the ilya of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.
Who was't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word Macduff is fled to England. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
City,
'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
'Tis these that early taint the female soul. Pope.
ITCH. n. s. γίτσα, Saxon.]
1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised as microscopes have discovered by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.
Lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrow of our youths,
That gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains. Shak. Timon.
The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou can't not be healed. Deutr. xxviii. 27.
As if divinity had catch'd
The itch, on purpose, to be scratch'd. Hudibras.
2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.
3. A constant teasing desire.
A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.
He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.
From servants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.
At half mankind when generous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue; for he thinks them knaves:
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.
To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.
A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wise man's Surgery.
My right eye itches; some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear. Dryden.
2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.
Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.—Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakespeare.
Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,
To sell and mart your offices for gold. Shak. Julius Caesar.
The itching ears, being an epidemick disease, give fair opportunity to every mountebank. Decay of Piety.
All such have still an itching to deride,
And vain would be upon the laughing side. Pope.
ITCHY. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.
ITEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.
ITEM. n. s.
1. A new article.
I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by item. Shakespeare.
If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glanv.
2. A hint; an innuendo.
To ITERATE. v. a. [from itero, Latin.]
1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.
We covet to make the palms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the palms oftner than any other part of Scripture besides; the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone to read them, as other parts of Scripture he doth. Hook.
If the one may monthly, the other may daily be iterated. Hooker.
In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest. Hooker.
The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon's Henry VII.
There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in con-

JUD

- currence, when the sound reflecting, returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon's Natural History.
2. To do over again.
Adhes thoroughly burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown's Vulgar Errours.
Adam took no thought,
Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate
Her former trespasses fear'd, the more to sooth
Him with her lov'd society. Milt. Par. Lost, b. ix.
ITERANT. adj. [from iterans, Latin.] Repeating.
Waters being near, make a current echo; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo. Bacon's Nat. History.
ITERATION. n. s. [from iteratio, Latin.] Repetition; recital over again.
Truth tir'd with iteration
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shakespeare.
My husband!
—Ay, 'twas he that told me first.
—My husband!
—What needs this iteration, woman?
I say, thy husband. Shakespeare's Othello.
Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chafeth away many a frivolous speech. Bacon's Essays.
In all these respects it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is farther improved by the frequent iteration and repetition. Hammond.
ITINERANT. adj. [from itinerans, French.] Wandering; not settled.
It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of itinerant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares. Addison's Spectator.
ITINERARY. n. s. [from itinerarius, French; itinerarium, Latin.] A book of travels.
The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom. Addison on Italy.
ITINERARY. adj. [from itinerarius, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.
He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it were rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress. Bacon's Henry VII.
ITSELF. pronoun. [It and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.
Who then shall blame
His peevish senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor. Locke.
JUBILANT. adj. [from jubilans, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.
The planets lift'ning flood,
While the bright pomp ascended jubilant. Milt. Par. Lost.
JUBILATION. n. s. [from jubilatio, Fr. jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.
JUBILEE. n. s. [from jubilum, Fr. jubilum, from jubi, low Latin.] A publick festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.
Angels utt'ring joy, heav'n rung
With jubilee, and loud hosanna's fill'd
Th' eternal regions. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing: the recreation of the judgment, or rejoicing, the jubilee of reason. South.
The town was all a jubilee of feasts. Dryden.
JUCUNDITY. n. s. [from jucunditas, jucundus, Latin.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.
The new or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves, will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed tempers. Brown.
JUDAS Tree. n. s. [from filiquastrum, Latin.] A plant.
It hath a papilionaceous flower, whose wings are placed above the standard: the head is composed of two petals; and is encompassed with the stamina; afterward becomes a long flat pod, containing several kidney shaped seeds: to which may be added roundish leaves, growing alternately on the branches.
Judas tree yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the Spring, and is increased by layers. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To JUDAIZE. v. n. [from judaizer, Fr. judaizer, low Latin.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.
Paul judaiz'd with Jews, was all to all. Sandys.
JUDGE. n. s. [from juge, French; judex, Latin.]
1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.
Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? Genesis.
A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows is God in his holy habitation. Pf. lxxviii. 5.
Thou art judge
Of all things made, and judgest only right. Milton.
It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully: it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art. Dryden.
2. One

JUD

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.
My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
A single voice; and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judges. Shakespeare, H. VIII.
3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.
How dares your pride,
As in a lifted field to fight your cause,
Unask'd the royal grant; nor marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try.
A perfect judge will read each piece of wit,
With the same spirit that its author writ.
To JUDGE. v. n. [juger, French; judico, Latin.]
1. To pass sentence.
My wrong be upon thee; the Lord judge between thee and me.
Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. 2 Chro. xix. 6.
2. To form or give an opinion.
Bethrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wife, if I can judge aright.
Ye judge after the flesh; I judge no man.
Authors to themselves, Milton.
Both what they judge and what they chuse.
If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil, and which Ovid. Dryden.
Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.
He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely. Locke.
3. To discern; to distinguish.
How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud?
Judge in yourselves: is it comely a woman pray unto God uncovered?
How properly the Tories may be called the whole body of the British nation, I leave to any one's judging. Addison.
To JUDGE. v. a.
1. To pass sentence upon; to examine authoritatively; to determine finally.
Chaos shall judge the strife.
Then those, whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.
2. To pass severe censure; to doom severely.
We shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies.
Judge not, that ye be not judged.
Let no man judge you in meat or drink.
JUDGE. n. f. [from judge, Latin.] One who forms judgment; or passes sentence.
The vulgar threatened to be their oppressors, and judges of their judges.
They who guide themselves merely by what appears, are ill judges of what they have not well examined. Digby.
JUDGMENT. n. f. [from judgement, French.]
1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.
O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason. Shakespeare, Julius Caesar.
The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgment, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be true or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs. Locke.
Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so, this tree is high. Watts.
2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgment.
If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgment only doth belong to thee. Shakespeare, H. VI.
3. The act of exercising judicature.
They gave judgment upon him. 2 Kings xxv. 6.
When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclosed
In majesty severe,
And sit in judgment on my soul,
O how shall I appear. Addison's Spectator.
4. Determination; decision.
Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgment is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding.
We shall make a certain judgment what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of.
Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgment of things proposed to our inquiry. Watts.
5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.
Judgment, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man in the rapture of poetical composition.
Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

JUD

6. Opinion; notion.
I see mens judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward
Draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.
When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you. Shakespeare.
7. Sentence against a criminal.
When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stir'd
With agony. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgment against him. Acts xxv. 15.
On Adam last this judgment he pronounc'd. Milton.
8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.
The judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. Rom. v. 16.
The precepts, promises, and threatenings of the Gospel will rise up in judgment against us, and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation. Tillotson.
9. Punishment inflicted by providence, with reference to some particular crime.
This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble, Touches us not with pity. Shakespeare, King Lear.
We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitableness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgments: it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance. Addison's Spectator.
10. Distribution of justice.
The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat. Acts xviii. 12.
Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakespeare, Coriol.
In judgments between rich and poor, consider not what the poor man needs, but what is his own. Taylor.
A bold and wise petitioner goes straight to the throne and judgment seat of the monarch. Arbutnot. and Pope's Mart. Scrib.
11. Judiciary laws; statutes.
If ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant. Deut.
12. The last doom.
The dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be as was his fight. Shakespeare, Hen. VI.
JUDICATORY. n. f. [from judico, Latin.]
1. Distribution of justice.
No such crime appeared as the lords, the supreme court of judicatory, would judge worthy of death. Clarendon.
2. Court of justice.
Human judicatories give sentence on matters of right and wrong, but inquire not into bounty and beneficence. Arbutnot.
JUDICATURE. n. f. [from judicatus, Fr. judicio, Latin.] Power of distributing justice.
The honour of the judges in their judicature is the king's honour.
If he should bargain for a place of judicature, let him be rejected with shame. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
In judicatories to take away the trumpet, the scarlet, the attendance, makes justice naked as well as blind. Saunders's Sermons.
JUDICIAL. adj. [from judicium, Latin.]
1. Practised in the distribution of public justice.
What government can be without judicial proceedings?
And what judicature without a religious oath? Bentley's Sermon.
2. Inflicted on as a penalty.
The resistance of those will cause a judicial hardness. Saunders.
JUDICIALLY. adv. [from judicial, Latin.] In the forms of legal justice.
It will behove us to think that we see God still looking on, and weighing all our thoughts, words, and actions in the balance of infallible justice, and passing the same judgment which he intends hereafter judicially to declare. Grew's Cosmog.
JUDICIARY. adj. [from judiciaire, Fr. judiciarius, Latin.] Passing judgment upon any thing.
Before weight be laid upon notions of judiciary astrologers, the influence of constellations ought, by severe experiments, to be made out.
JUDICIOUS. adj. [from judicieux, French.] Prudent; wise; skillful in any matter or affair.
For your husband,
He's noble, wife, judicious, and best knows
The fits of th' season. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Love hath his feat
In reason, and is judicious.
To each favour meaning we apply,
And palate call judicious.
We are beholden to judicious writers of all ages for those discoveries they have left behind them. Locke.
JUDICIOUSLY. adv. [from judicious, Latin.] Skillfully; wisely; with just determination.
So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
That your least praise is to be regular. Dryden.
Longinus

JUK

- Longinus has judiciously preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to excellence. Dryden.
JUG. n. f. [jugge, Danish.] A large drinking vessel with a gibbous or swelling belly.
You'd rail upon the hostess of the house,
Because the bought stone jug and no seal'd quarts. Shakespeare.
He fetch'd 'em drink,
Fill'd a large jug up to the brim. Swift's Miscel.
To JUGGLE. v. n. [jouglor or jongler, Fr. jocari, Lat.]
1. To play tricks by flight of hand; to show false appearances of extraordinary performances.
The ancient miracle of Memnon's statue seems to be a juggling of the Ethiopian priests. Digby on Bodies.
2. To practise artifice or imposture.
Be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
Is't possible the spells of France should juggle Men into such strange mockeries? Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
They ne'er forswore themselves, nor lied,
Disdain'd to flay for friends contents;
Nor juggl'd about settlements. Hudibras, p. iii.
JUGGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A trick by legerdemain.
2. An imposture; a deception.
The notion was not the invention of politicians, and a juggle of state to cozen the people into obedience. Tillotson.
JUGGLER. n. f. [from juggle.]
1. One who practises flight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.
They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working forerers that change the mind,
Disguis'd cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like liberties of sin. Shakespeare.
I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Aristeus was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Cæsius, and a notable juggler.
Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostors, do daily delude them. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
The juggler which another's sight can show,
But teaches how the world his own may know.
One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 18.
What magic makes our money rise,
When dropt into the northern main;
Or do these jugglers cheat us?
2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.
O me, you juggler; oh, you canker blossom,
You thief of love; what, have you come by night,
And stol'n my love's heart from him?
I sing no harm
To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Donne.
JUGGLINGLY. adv. [from juggle.] In a deceptive manner.
JUGULAR. adj. [from jugulum, Latin.] Belonging to the throat.
A gentleman was wounded into the internal jugular, through his neck. Wijeman's Surgery.
JUICE. n. f. [jus, French; juys, Dutch.]
1. The liquor, sap, or water of plants and fruits.
If I define wine, I must say, wine is a juice not liquid, or wine is a substance; for juice includes both substance and liquid. Watts's Legick, p. i.
Unnumber'd fruits,
A friendly juice to cool thirst's rage contain. Thomson.
2. The fluid in animal bodies.
Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone. Benjamin, Johnson's Discovery.
An animal whose juices are unbound can never be nourish'd; unbound juices can never repair the fluids. Arbutnot.
JUICELESS. adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice.
Divine Providence has spread her table every-where; not with a juiceless green carpet, but with succulent herbage and nourishing grass. More's Antidote against Atheism.
When Boreas's spirit blusters fore,
Beware th' inclement heav'n's; now let thy hearth
Crackle with juiceless boughs. Philips.
JUICINESS. n. f. [from juice.] Plenty of juice; succulence.
JUICY. adj. [from juice.] Moist; full of juice.
Earth being taken out of watery woods, will put forth herbs of a fat and juicy substance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Each plant and juicyest gourd will pluck.
The musk's surpassing worth! that, in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring. Philips.
To JUKE. v. n. [jucher, French.]
1. To perch upon any thing: as, birds;

JUM

2. Juking, in Scotland, denotes still any complaisance by bending of the head.
Two asses travelled; the one laden with oats, the other with money: the money-merchant was so proud of his trust, that he went juking and tossing of his head. L'Estrange.
JUB. n. f. [zizyphus, Lat.] A plant whose flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose; out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an oblong fleshy fruit, shaped like an olive, including an hard shell divided into cells, each containing an oblong nut or kernel. The fruit is like a small plum, but it has little flesh upon the stone. Mill.
JULAP. n. f. [A word of Arabick original; julapium, low Lat. julep, Fr.]
Julap is an extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serves for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone. Quincy.
Behold this cordial julap here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixt. Milton.
If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour the bringing that away; and by good sudorifics and cordials expel the venom, and temperate the heat and acrimony by julaps and emulsions. Wijeman's Surgery.
JULUS. n. f.
1. July flower. See CLOVE-GILLIFLOWER and GILLIFLOWER.
2. Julius, among botanists, denotes those long worm-like tufts or palms, as they are called in willows, which at the beginning of the year grow out, and hang pendular down from hazels, walnut-trees, &c. Miller.
JULY. n. f. [Julius, Lat. juliet, Fr.] The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March, named July in honour of Julius Cæsar; the seventh month from January.
July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bolom sun-burnt. Peaeham.
JUMART. n. f. [French.]
Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent. Locke.
To JUMBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer, jembre, from combler, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.
Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.
A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy scripture. Locke.
Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky mains make people wise;
And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem.
Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were at first created, and are continually ordered for the best, than that the whole universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favouredly cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter. Bentley's Sermons.
How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope's Dunciad.
That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy. Swift.
To JUMBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.
They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.
JUMBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.
Had the world been coagulated from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.
What jumble here is made of ecclesiastical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal justice. Swift.
JUMENT. n. f. [jument, Fr. jumentum, Lat.] Beast of burthen.
Juments, as horses, oxen, and asses, have no eructation, or belching. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. i.
To JUMP. v. n. [gumpen, Dutch.]
1. To leap; to skip; to move forward without step or sliding.
Not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and an half by the square. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Here, upon this bank and shelve of time,
We'd jump the life to come. Shakespeare, Macbeth.
The herd come jumping by me,
And fearless, quench their thirst, while I look on,
And take me for their fellow-citizen. Dryden.
So have I seen from Severn's brink
A flock of geese jump down together,
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And swimming never wet a feather. Swift.
Candidates petition the emperor to entertain the court with a dance on the rope; and whoever jumps the highest succeeds in the office. Gulliver's Travels.

2. To

2. To leap suddenly.
One Peregrinus jumped into a fiery furnace at the Olympic games, only to shew the company how far his vanity could carry him. Collier.
We see a little, presume a great deal, and so jump to the conclusion. Spectator, N^o. 626.
3. To jolt.
The noise of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nab. iii. 2.
4. To agree; to tally; to join.
Do not embrace me till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump
That I am Viola. Shakef. Twelfth Night.
In some sort it jumps with my humour. Shakefpeare.
But though they jump not on a just account,
Yet do they all confirm a Turkish fleet. Shakef. Othello.
Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the bar'rous nations. Shakefpeare.
Herein perchance he jumps not with Lipsius. Hakevill.
Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras, p. i.
This shews how perfectly the rump
And commonwealth in nature jump:
For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;
So in this mungrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras, p. iii.
Good wits jump, and mine the nimble of the two. More.
Good now, how your devotions jump with mine. Dryd.
I am happier for finding our judgments jump in the notion. Pope to Swift.
- JUMP. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.
Otherwise one man could not excel another, but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or center wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of well doers. Hooker.
But since to jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
Are here arriv'd. Shakefpeare's Hamlet.
Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Shakefpeare's Othello.
- JUMP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of jumping; a leap; a skip.
The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that, which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly conjoined with what he knows already, as is possible. Locke.
2. A lucky chance.
Do not exceed
The precept of this scrowl: our fortune lies Upon this jump. Shakef. Antony and Cleopatra.
3. [Jape, French.] A waistcoat; a kind of loose or limber itays worn by sickly ladies.
The weeping caskock fear'd into a jump,
A sign the presbyter's worn to the stump. Cleaveland.

1. Cheesecake; a kind of sweetmeat of curds and sugar.
2. Any delicacy.
A goodly table of pure ivory,
All spread with juncates, fit to entertain
The greatest prince. Spenser, Sonnet 77.
With stories told of many a cat,
How fairy Mab the juncates eat. Milton.
3. A furtive or private entertainment. It is now improperly written junket in this sense, which alone remains much in use. See JUNKET.
- JUNCOSUS. adj. [juncus, Lat.] Full of bulrushes.
JUNCTION. n. f. [junction, French.] Union; coalition.
Upon the junction of the two corps, our spies discovered a great cloud of dust. Addison.
- JUNCTURE. n. f. [junctura, Latin.]
1. The line at which two things are joined together.
Besides those grosser elements of bodies, salt, sulphur, and mercury, there may be ingredients of a more subtle nature, which being extremely little, may escape unheeded at the junctures of the diffillatory vessels, though never so carefully luted. Boyle.
2. Joint; articulation.
She has made the back-bone of several vertebræ, as being less in danger of breaking than if they were all one entire bone without those gristly junctures. More.
All other animals have transverse bodies; and though some do raise themselves upon their hinder legs to an upright posture, yet they cannot endure it long, neither are the figures or junctures, or order of their bones, fitted to such a posture. Hale's Originat. of Mankind.
3. Union; amity.
Nor are the sobriest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and juncture of hearts, which I desire to bear in those holy offices to be performed with me. K. Charles.

4. A critical point or article of time.
By this profession in that juncture of time, they bid farewell to all the pleasures of this life. Addison.
When any law does not conduce to the publick safety, but in some extraordinary junctures, the very observation of it would endanger the community, that law ought to be laid asleep. Addison's Freeholder, N^o. 16.
- JUNE. n. f. [Jun, Fr. Junius, Lat.] The sixth month from January.
June is drawn in a mantle of dark green. Peacocks.
- JUNIOR. adj. [junior, Lat.] One younger than another.
The fools my juniors by a year,
Are tortur'd with suspense and fear,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd to stand between. Swift.
According to the nature of men of years, I was repining at the rise of my juniors, and unequal distribution of wealth. Tatler, N^o. 100.
- JUNIPER. n. f. [juniperus, Lat.] A plant.
The leaves of the juniper are long, narrow, and prickly; the male flowers are, in some species, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree; but in other species they are produced on different trees from the fruit: the first is a soft pulpy berry, containing three seeds in each. Miller.
Some of our common juniper shrubs are males and some females, of the same species. The male shrubs produce, in April and May, a small kind of jule with apices on them, very large, and full of farina; the females produce none of these jules, but only the berries, which do not ripen till the second year, and then do not immediately fall off; so that it is no uncommon thing to see the berries of three different years at once on the same tree. The shrub is very common with us on heaths and barren hills, but the berries used medicinally in our shops are brought from Germany, where it is greatly more abundant. The berries are powerful attenuants, diureticks, and carminative. Hill.
A clyster may be made of the common decoctions, or of mallows, bay, and juniper berries, with oil of linseed. Wijem.
- JUNK. n. f. [probably an Indian word.]

1. To feast secretly; to make entertainments by stealth.
Whatever good bits you can pilfer in the day, save them to junket with your fellow servants at night. Swift.
2. To feast.
Job's children junketed and feasted together often, but the reckoning cost them dear at last. South's Sermon.
The apostle would have no revelling or junketing. South.
- JUNTO. n. f. [Italian.] A cabal; a kind of men combined in any secret design.
Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learnings, and grace from morality. South.
From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in my destruction. Gulliver's Travels.
- IVORY. n. f. [ivoire, French; ebur, Lat.]
Ivory is a hard, solid, and firm substance, of a fine white colour, and capable of a very good polish: it is the denser extus of the elephant, who carries on each side of his jaws a tooth of six or seven feet in length, of the thickness of a man's thigh at the base, and almost entirely solid; the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds: these ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance, seeming to have a great number of glands in it. The finest ivory is brought from the East-Indies, where great quantity of it is not taken immediately from the head of the animal, but found buried in the earth. The ivory of the islands of Ceylon and of Achem do not become yellow in the wearing as all other ivory does, and it therefore bears a greater price than the Guinea coast. The preparations of ivory have the same restorative virtues with those of the hartshorn. Hill.
There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shakef. Merchant of Venice.
Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, bearing a heart with an ivory key. Peacocks.
From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issue'd. Milton.
Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,
Of polish'd iv'ry this, that of transparent horn:
True visions through transparent horn arise,
Through polish'd iv'ry pass deluding lies. Dryden's Æn. Juno.

This is not to be measured by the principles of jurists. Bac.
- JUROR. n. f. [jura, Lat.] One that serves on the jury.
Were the jurors picked out of choice men, this would be as bad; for the evidence will be as deceitful as the verdict. Spenser's State of Ireland.
I shall find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful, I see your end,
'Tis my undoing. Shakef. Henry VIII.
I sing no harm, good foot! to any night,
Officer, jugler, or justice of peace,
Juror, or judge. Donne.
About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in. Hayward.
- JURY. n. f. [jurata, Lat. juré, Fr.]
Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the escheatour make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest: if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, empannelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half year courts of the justices errants, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, villa vera, or dis-

JUS

- allow by writing ignamus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance, but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred, where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the case of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending. Cowell.
- The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. Shakef. Meas. or Measure.
How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shakef. H. IV.
Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bac.
- JURYMAN. n. f. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.
The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine.
No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single jurymen, much less of a whole jury. Swift's Miscel.
- JURYMAY. n. f. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast left in a fight, or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the misen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a hard shift to sail. Harris.
- JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Latin.]

Of taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.
Once on a time La Mancha's knight, they say,
A certain bard encount'ring on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As ere could Dennis of the laws o' th' stage. Pope.
Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watt's Logick.
4. Virtuous; innocent; pure.
Noah was a just man, and perfect. Gen. vi. 9.
How should man be just with God? Job ix. 2.
A just man falleth seven times and riseth. Prov. xxiv. 16.
He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Mat. xiv. 14.
5. True; not forged; not falsely imputed; well grounded.
Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit. Hooker.
Me though just right
Did first create your leader. Milton.
6. Equally retributed.
He received a just recompence of reward, Heb. ii. 2.
Whose damnation is just. Rem. iii. 8.
As Hesiod sings, spread water o'er thy fields,
And a most just and glad increase it yields. Denham.
7. Complete without superfluity or defect.
He was a comely personage, a little above just stature, well and strait limbed, but slender. Bacon's Henry VII.
8. Regular; orderly.
When all
The war shall stand ranged in its just array,
And dreadful pomp; then will I think on thee. Addison.

take up the business of a just volume. Hale's Orig. of Man.
There seldom appeared a just army in the civil wars.
Dutchess of Newcastle.
11. Exact in retribution.
See nations slowly wife, and meanly just,
To bury'd merit raise the tardy buff.
Vanity of Human Wishes.

Just. adv.

1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

The god Pan guided my hand just to the heart of the beast. Sidney.
They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be established. Hoker.
There, ev'n just there he stood; and as the spoke,
Where last the spectre was, she cast her look. Dryden.
A few seem to understand him right; just as when our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you.
Bentley's Sermons.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.
2. Merely; barely.

It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all. L'Estrange.

The nereids swam before
To smooth the seas; a soft etesian gale
But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail. Dryden.
Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
That so I neither may be rich nor poor;
And having just enough, not covet more. Dryden.

3. Nearly.
Being spent with age, and just at the point of death, Democritus call'd for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

Just. n. f. [juste, French.] Mock encounter on horseback;
tilt; tournament.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and lance. Sidney.
What news from Oxford? hold those justs and triumphs?
Shakespeare's Richard II.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,
In equal squadrons rang'd on either side;
Then turn'd their horses heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryden.

To Just. v. n. [juster, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.
2. To push; to drive; to juggle.

JUSTICE. n. f. [justice, French; justitia, Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due.
O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam. xv. 4.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Loc.

2. Vindicative retribution; punishment.

This shews you are above
Yon justices, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can venge. Shakespeare. King Lear.
He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut. xxxiii. 21.

Left justice overtake us.
Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others: the one procures fear, and the other love. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

3. Right; assertion of right.

Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakespeare. King Lear.

4. [Justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment.

And thou, Eldras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. Esdr. viii. 23.

5. JUSTICE of the King's Bench. [justiciarius de Banco Regis.]
Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Angliae. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they

JUS

be incident to any personal action depending before them.

Give that whipster his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice's warrant. Prior.

6. JUSTICE of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowel.

7. JUSTICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Forestae.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert:
of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowel.

8. JUSTICES of Assize. [justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assizes; the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Cowel.

9. JUSTICES in Eyre. [justicarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French eyre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties, to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the king's bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Termi-ner, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowel.

10. JUSTICES of Gaol Delivery. [justicarii ad Gaolas deliverandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprize those prisoners, that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorized to this. Cowel.

11. JUSTICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day: nisi prius justiciarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowel.

12. JUSTICES of Peace. [justicarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respects, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowel.

The justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakespeare. As you like it.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

I sing no harm
To officer, juggler, or justice of peace. Donne.

To JUSTICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. A word not in use.

As for the title of proseripcion, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justified himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended, for intending to poison the young queen of Scots, the king delivered him to the French king, to be justified by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JUSTICEMENT. n. f. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JUSTICER. n. f. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice.

JUSTIFIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason; conformable to justice.

Just are the ways of God,
And justifiable to men. Milton's Agonistes.

Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

JUSTIFIABLENESS. n. f. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JUSTIFIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right.

A man may more justifiably throw crofs and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICATION. n. f. [justification, French; justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support; abolution from guilt.

I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Among theological arguments, in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift.

2. Deliverance by pardon from sins past. Clarke.

In such righteousness
To them by faith imputed, they may find justification towards God, and peace
Of conscience. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. xii.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God ac-cepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare apness of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JUSTIFICATION. n. f. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JUSTIFIER. n. f. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or abolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which be-leaveth in Jesus. Ro. iii. 26.

To JUSTIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justifier, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to abolve from an accusation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor;
I cannot justify, whom law condemns. Shakespeare. H. VI.

They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. Mat. xi.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? Job xxv. 4.

There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifieth in judgment. Ecclesi. x. 25.

You're neither justifying, nor yet accus'd. Dryden.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.

When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel fallhood. Sidney.

What she did, whatever in itself,
Her doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milt. Par. Lost.

My unwilling flight the gods enforce,
And that must justify our sad divorce. Denham.

Yet still thy foals shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense. Dryden.

Let others justify their missions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. To free from past sin by pardon.

By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Acts xiii.

To JUSTLE. v. n. [from just, juster, French.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance Puts back leave taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure. Shakespeare. Troilus and Cressida.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one

JUXTAPOSITION. n. f. [juxtaposition, French; juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposition; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a meer juxtaposition. Glauco. Scep.

Ivy. n. f. [1313, Saxon; hedera, Latin.] A plant.

The characters are: it is a parasitick plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment: the leaves are angular; the flowers, for the most part, consist of six leaves, and are succeeded by round black berries, which grow in round bunches, each of which, for the most part, contains four seeds. Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool;
A belt of straw, and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my love.

Raleigh.

The clasping ivy where to climb.

Milt. Parad. Lost.

JY MOLD. adj. [See GIMAL.]

Their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;
And in their pale dull mouths the jymold bit
Lies, foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

K.

K E C

K.

A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill; but is not much in use, except after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brack, stick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with e final: as, clucke, checke, tricke. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e final: as, cloke, broke, brake, pike, duke, etc. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shock, beck. The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knise, knee, knell.

KA'LENDAR. n. f. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour

Stand as accursed in the calendar. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

KA'LI. n. f. [an Arabick word.] Sea-weed, of the ashes of which glass was made, whence the word alkali.

The ashes of the weed kali is sold to the Venetians for their glass works. Bacon.

KAM. adj. Crooked.

Kam, in Erie, is squint-eyed, and applied to any thing awry: clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, crooked from the purpose. A-schembo, Italian, hence our English a-kimbo. Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim kam.

The blood he hath lost, he dropt it for his country:

And what is left, to lose it by his country,

Were to us all that do't and suffer it,

A brand to th' end o' th' world.

—This is clean kam.

—Meerly awry.

Shakespeare.

To KAW. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook. See CAW.

Jack-daws kawing and fluttering about the nests, set all their young ones a gaping; but having nothing in their empty mouths but noise and air, leave them as hungry as before.

Locke.

Kaw. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The daffard crow that to the wood made wing,

With her loud kaws her craven-kind doth bring,

Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird.

Dryden.

KAYLE. n. f. [quille, French.]

1. Ninepin; kettlepins, of which skittles seems a corruption.

And now at keels they try a harmless chance,

And now their cur they teach to fetch and dance.

The residue of the time they wear out at coits, kayles, or the like idle exercises. Carver's Survey of Cornwall.

2. A kind of play still retained in Scotland, in which nine holes ranged in three's are made in the ground, and an iron bullet rolled in among them.

To KECK. v. n. [hecken, Dutch.] To heave the stomach; to reach at vomiting.

All those diets do dry up humours and rheums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not heck at them at the first. Bacon's Nat. Hist. N^o. 68.

The faction, is it not notorious?

Keck at the memory of glorious.

Swift's Miscel.

To KECKLE a cable. To defend a cable round with rope.

Ainsworth.

KECKSY. n. f. [commonly hex, cigue, French; cicuta, Latin. Skinner.] Skinner seems to think kecksy or hex the same as hemlock. It is used in Staffordshire both for hemlock, and any other hollow jointed plant.

Nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,

Losing both beauty and utility.

Shakespeare. Henry V.

KECKY. adj. [from hex.] Resembling a hex.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft kecky body; so as at the end cut transversely, it looks as a bundle of wires.

To KEDGE. v. a. [kagbe, a small vessel, Dutch.]

In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they set the fore-sail, or fore-top-sail and mizzen, and so let her drive with the tide. The sails are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawser that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it; then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kedging, and from this use the anchor a kedger.

Harris.

KE'DGER. n. f. [from kedge.] A small anchor used in a river. See KEDGE.

KEE, the provincial plural of cow, properly kine.

The seditious remain within their station, which, by reason of the nativeness of the beauly multitude, might be more fitly termed a kenel than a camp. Hayward.
2. A number of dogs kept in a kennel.
A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping kenel of French curs. Shakespeare.
3. The hole of a fox, or other beast.
4. [Kennel, Dutch; chenal, Fr. cahalis, Latin.] The watercourse of a street.
Bad humours gather to a bile; or, as divers kennels flow to one sink, so in short time their numbers increased. Hayw.
He always came in so dirty, as if he had been dragged through the kenel at a boarding-school. Arbutnot.
To KENNEL. v. n. [from kenel.] To lie; to dwell: used of beasts, and of man in contempt.
Yet, when they list, would creep,
If ought disturb'd their noise, into her womb,
And kenel there; yet there still bark'd and howl'd Within, unceasing. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ii.
The dog kennel'd in a hollow tree, and the cock rooted upon the boughs. L'Estrange's Fables.
KERT. pret. and part. pass. of keep.
KERCHEIF. n. f. [coiracheif; Chaucer; coirre, to cover, and cheif, the head; and hence a handkerchief to wipe the face or hands.]
1. A head dress.
I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond; thou hast the right arch'd bent of the brow, that becomes the tire vaultant.
—A plain kercchief, Sir John; my brows become nothing else. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
The proudest kercchief of the court shall rest
Well satisfy'd of what they love the best. Dryden.
2. Any cloth used in dress.
O! what a time have you chose out, brave Caius,
To wear a kercchief. Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.
Every man had a large kercchief folded about the neck.
Hayward.
KERCHEIFED. } adj. [from kercchief.] Dressed; hooded.

kerf. Moxon's Mech. Exercise.
KERMES. n. f.
Kermes is a roundish body, of the bigness of a pea, and of a brownish red colour, covered when most perfect with a purplish grey dust. It contains a multitude of little distinct granules, soft, and when crush'd yield a scarlet juice. It is found adhering to a kind of holm oak, and till lately was generally understood to be a vegetable excrecence; but we now know it to be the extended body of an animal parent, filled with a numerous offspring, which are the little red granules. Hill.
KERN. n. f. [an Irish word.] Irish foot soldier; an Irish boor.
Out of the fry of these rake-hell horseboys, growing up in knavery and villainy, are their kerns supplied. Spenser.
No sooner justice had with valour arm'd,
Compell'd these skipping kernes to trust their heels,
But the Norwegian lord, surveying advantage,
Began a fresh assault. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
If in good plight these Northern kerns arrive,
Then does fortune promise fair. Philips's Briton.
KERN. n. f. A hand-mill consisting of two pieces of stone, by which corn is ground. It is still used in some parts of Scotland.
To KERN. v. n. [probably from kernel, or, by change of a vowel, corrupted from corn.]
1. To harden as ripened corn.
When the price of corn falleth, men break no more ground than will supply their own turn, wherethrough it falleth out that an ill kerned or faved harvest soon emptieth their old store. Carew's Survey of Cornwall. 2. To

The principal knack is in making the juice, when sufficiently boiled, to ken or granulate. Grew.
KERNEL. n. f. [cynnel, a gland, Saxon; karne, Dutch;
cerneau, French.]
The edible substance contained in a shell.
As brown in hue
As hazle nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shakespeare.
There can be no kernel in this light nut; the foul of this man is his clothes. Shakespeare. All's well that ends well.
The kernel of the nut serves them for bread and meat, and the shells for cups. More.
2. Any thing included in a husk or integument.
The kernel of a grape, the fig's small grain,
Can cloath a mountain, and o'erhade a plain. Denham.
Oats are ripe when the straw turns yellow and the kernel hard. Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. The seeds of pulpy fruits.
I think he will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare. Tempest.
The apple inclosed in wax was as fresh as at the first putting in, and the kernels continued white. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
4. The central part of any thing upon which the ambient strata are concentered.
A solid body in the bladder makes the kernel of a stone. Arb.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles kest. Fairfax.
KESTREL. n. f. A little kind of baltard hawk. Hammer.
In his kestrel kind,
A pleasing vein of glory, vain did find,
To which his flowing tongue, and troublous spirit,
Gave him great aid. Fairy Queen.
Kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks. Bacon.
KERCH. n. f. [from caicchio, Italian, a barrel.] A heavy ship.
I wonder
That such a kerch can with his very bulk
Take up the rays of th' beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth. Shak. Henry VIII.
KETTLE. n. f. [ceet, Saxon; ketel, Dutch.] A vessel in which liquor is boiled. In the kitchen the name of pot is given to the boiler that grows narrower towards the top, and of kettle to that which grows wider. In authors they are confounded.
The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little scethes shone. Dryden.
KETTLEDUM. n. f. [kettle and dum.] A drum of which the head is spread over a body of brafs.
As he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettledum and trumpet thus Bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shakespeare. Hamlet.
KEY. n. f. [coeg, Saxon.]
1. An instrument formed with cavities correspondent to the wards of a lock, by which the bolt of a lock is pushed forward or backward.
If a man were porter of hellgate, he should have old turning the key. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shak. King Lear.
Poor key cold figure of a holy king!
Pale ashes of the house of Lancaster. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
The glorious standard left to heav'n they spread,
With Peter's keys ennobled and his crown. Fairfax.
Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire
To lay their just hands on that golden key,
That opens the palace of eternity. Milton.
Conscience is its own counsellor, the sole master of its own secrets; and it is the privilege of our nature, that every man should keep the key of his own breast. South's Sermons.
He came, and knocking thrice, without delay
The longing lady heard, and turn'd the key. Dryden.
I keep her in one room, I lock it;
The keys look here, is in this pocket. Prior.

KIC

2. An instrument by which something is screwed or turned.
Hide the key of the jack. Swift.
3. An explanation of any thing difficult.
An emblem without a key to't, is no more than a tale of a tub. L'Estrange.
These notions, in the writings of the ancients darkly delivered, receive a clearer light when compared with this theory, which represents every thing plainly, and is a key to their thoughts. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books. Locke.
4. The parts of a musical instrument which are struck with the fingers.
Pamela loves to handle the spinnet, and touch the keys. Pam.
5. [In music.] Is a certain tone whereto every composition, whether long or short, ought to be fitted; and this key is said to be either flat or sharp, not in respect of its own nature, but with relation to the flat or sharp third, which is joined with it. Harris.
Hippolita, I woo'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love, doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling. Shakespeare.
But speak you with a sad brow? Or do you play the flouting Jack? Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song? Shak. Much Ado about Nothing.
Not know my voice! Oh, time's extremity!
Hast thou so crack'd and splitt'd my poor tongue
In sev'n short years, that here my only son Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares? Shakespeare.
6. [Keye, Dutch; quai, French.] A bank raised perpendicular for the ease of lading and unlading ships.
A key of fire ran along the shore, Dryden.
And lightn'd all the river with a blaze.
KEYAGE. n. f. [from key.] Money paid for lying at the key. Ainsworth.
KEYHOLE. n. f. [key and hole.] The perforation in the door or lock through which the key is put.
Make doors fast upon a woman's wit, and it will out at the casement; shut that, and 'twill out at the keyhole. Shakespeare.
I looked in at the keyhole, and saw a well-made man. Tatler.
I keep her in one room; I lock it;
The key, look here, is in this pocket;
The keyhole is that left? Most certain. Prior.
KEYSTONE. n. f. [key and stone.] The middle stone of an arch.
If you will add a keystone and chaprels to the arch, let the breadth of the upper part of the keystone be the height of the arch. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.
KIBE. n. f. [from kerb, a cut, German, Skinner; from kibwe, Welsh, Minshew.] An ulcerated chilblain; a chap in the heel caused by the cold.
If 'twere a kibe, 'twould put me to my slipper. Shakespeare.
The toe of the peasant comes to near the heel of our courtier, that it galls his kibe. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
One boast of the cure, calling them a few kibes. Wife's Man.
KIBED. adj. [from kibe.] Troubled with kibes: as kibed heels.
To KICK. v. a. [kaichen, German; calco, Latin.] To strike with the foot.
He must endure and digest all affronts, adore the foot that kicks him, and kiss the hand that strikes him. South.
It anger'd Turenne once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.
Another, whose son had employments at court, that valued not, now and then, a kicking or a caning. Swift.
To KICK. v. n. To beat the foot in anger or contempt.
Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice, which I have commanded? 1 Sa. ii. 29.
Jethurun waxed fat and kicked. Deutr. xxxii. 15.
The doctrines of the holy Scriptures are terrible enemies to wicked men, and this is that which makes them kick against religion, and spurn at the doctrines of that holy book. Tillot.
KICK. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow with the foot.
What, are you dumb? Quick, with your answer, quick,
Before my foot salutes you with a kick. Dryd. Juvenal.
KICKER. n. f. [from kick.] One who strikes with his foot.
KICKSHAW. n. f. [This word is supposed, I think with truth, to be only a corruption of quelque chose, something; yet Milton seems to have understood it otherwise; for he writes it kick-shaw, and seems to think it used in contempt of dancing.]
1. Something uncommon; fantastical; something ridiculous.
Shall we need the monstres of Paris to take our hopeful youth into their slight and prodigal custodies, and send them over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kick-shaw? Milton.
2. A dish so changed by the cookery that it can scarcely be known.
Some pigeons, a couple of short-legged hens, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaw. Shakespeare. H. IV.
In wit, as well as war, they give us vigour;
Cressly was lost by kickshaw and foup-meagre. Fenton.
KICKSY-WICKSY. n. f. [from kick and wince.] A made word in ridicule and disdain of a wife. Hammer.

steal children; to steal human beings.
KIDNAPPER. n. f. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings.
The man compounded with the merchant, upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had smelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper. L'Estrange.
These people lye in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law. Spektator.
- KIDNEY. n. f. [Etymology unknown.]
- These are two in number, one on each side: they have the same figure as kidneybeans: their length is four or five fingers, their breadth three, and their thickness two: the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which, by the motion of the heart and arteries, is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the ferosity being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder. Quincy.
A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his mesentery and kidneys. Wise man's Surgery.
 - Race; kind: in ludicrous language.
Think of that, a man of my kidney; think of that, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.
There are millions in the world of this man's kidney, that take up the same resolution without noise. L'Estrange.
- KIDNEYBEAN. n. f. [so named from its shape.]
It hath a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pointal, which becomes a long pod, inclosing several seeds, which are shaped almost like a kidney: it has pinnated leaves, consisting of an unequal number of lobes. Miller.
Kidneybeans are a sort of cod ware, that are very pleasant wholesale food. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Dutch.]
- To deprive of life; to put to death as an agent.
Dar'lt thou resolve to kill a friend of mine?
—Please you, I'd rather kill two enemies. Shakespeare. R. III.
Ye have brought us forth into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly with hunger. Ex. xvi. 3.
There was killing of young and old, making away of men, women, and children. 2 Mac. v. 13.
 - To destroy animals for food.
We're mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,
To fright the animals, and to kill them up
In their assign'd and native dwelling place. Shakespeare.
Thou shalt kill of thy herd, and of thy flock. Deutr. xii.
Shall I take my bread, and my flesh that I have killed for my shearers? 1 Sa. xxv. 11.
 - To deprive of life as a cause or instrument.
The medicines which go to the magical ointments, if they were used inwards, would kill those that use them; and therefore they work potentially, though outwards. Bacon.
 - To deprive of vegetative or other motion, or active qualities.
Try with oil, or barm of drink, so they be such things as kill not the bough. Bacon's Natural History.
Catharticks of mercurials mix with all animal acids, as appears by killing it with spittle. Floyer on the Humours.
- KILLER. n. f. [from kill.] One that deprives of life.
What sorrow, what amazement, what shame was in Am-phialus, when he saw his dear foster-father find him the killer of his only son! Sidney.
Wilt thou for the old lion hunt, or fill
His hungry whelps? and for the killer kill,
When couch'd in dreadful dens?
So rude a time,
When love was held so capital a crime,

KIN

- That a crown'd head could no compassion find,
But dy'd, because the killer had been kind. Waller.
- KILLOW. n. f. [This seems a corruption of coal and low, a flame, as foot is thereby produced.]
An earth of a blackish or deep blue colour, and doubtless had its name from kollow, by which name, in the North, the smut or grime on the backs of chimneys is called. Woodward.
- KILN. n. f. [clyn, Saxon.] A stove; a fabrick formed for admitting heat, in order to dry or burn things contained in it.

kiln.
The best way is to kindry them. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- KILT. for kill'd. Spenser.
- KILMBO. adj. [Ja fchembo, Italian.] Crooked; bent; arched.
The kimbo handles seem with bears-foot carv'd,
And never yet to table have been serv'd. Dryden's Virgil.
He observed them edging towards one another to whisper;
so that John was forced to fit with his arms a kimbo, to keep them asunder. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
- KIN. n. f. [cynne, Saxon.]
- Relation either of consanguinity or affinity.
You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin, and so a friend to their persons, not to their errors. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Th' unhappy Palamon,
Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free,
Without a crime, except his kin to me. Dryden.
 - Relatives; those who are of the same race.
Tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound. Shakespeare.
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overborn by fury of the tide. Dryden.
 - A relation; one related.
Then is the soul from God; so pagans say,
Which law by nature's light her heavenly kind,
Naming her kin to God, and God's bright ray,
A citizen of heav'n, to earth confin'd. Davies.
- The same general class, though perhaps not the same species; thing related.
The burst,
And the ear-deaf'ning voice of the oracle,
Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpriz'd my sense,
That I was nothing. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in a little hot water, is altogether differing from the stink of the other, being of kin to that of other calcareous salts. Boyle.
- A diminutive termination from kind, a child, Dutch: as, man-nikin, minikin.
KIND. adj. [from cynne, relation, Saxon.]
- Benevolent; filled with general good-will.
By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done
To pluck me by the beard. Shakespeare. King Lear.
Some of the ancients, like kind hearted men, have talked much of annual refrigeriums, or intervals of punishment to the damned, as particularly on the great festivals of the resurrection and ascension. South's Sermons.
 - Favourable; beneficent.
He is kind to the unthankful and evil. Lu. vi. 35.
- KIND. n. f. [cynne, Saxon.]
- Race; general class. Kind in Teutonic answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.
Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kinds. Hosier.
As when the total kind
Of birds, in orderly array on wings,
Came summon'd over Eden, to receive Their names of Thee. Milton's Parad. Lost, b. vi.
That both are animalia,
I grant; but not rationalia;
For though they do agree in kind,
Specific difference we find. Hudibras, p. i.
God and nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but of kinds and companies. South's Sermons.
- He with his wife were only left behind
Of perill'd man; they two were human kind. Dryden.
I instance some acts of virtue common to Heathens and Christians; but I suppose them to be performed by Christians, after a more sublime manner than ever they were among the Heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection. Atterb.
He,

KIN

- He, with a hundred arts refin'd,
Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind. Pope.

have been looked upon as most perfect in their kind, have been found, upon enquiry, to have so many. Baker.
 - Natural state.
He did, by edict, give the goods of all the prisoners unto those that had taken them, either to take them in kind, or compound for them. Bacon's Henry VII.
The tax upon tillage was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decime, or tithes. Arbutnot on Coins.
 - Nature; natural determination.
The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands,
And in the doing of the deed of kind,
He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes. Shakespeare.
Some of you, on pure instinct of nature,
Are led by kind to admire your fellow-creature. Dryden.
 - Manner; way.
Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will displease you. Shakespeare. Henry IV.
This will encourage industrious improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind than take five in the hundred. Bacon's Essays.
 - Sort. It has a slight and unimportant sense.
Diogenes was asked, in a kind of scorn, what was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answer'd, because the one knew what they wanted, the other did not. Bacon.
- To KINDLE. v. a.
- To set on fire; to light; to make to burn.
He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it and baketh bread. Jf. xlv. 15.
I was not forgetful of those sparks, which some mens distempers formerly studied to kindle in parliaments. K. Charles.
If the fire burns vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled: there is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun. South's Sermons.
 - To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat;
to fire the mind.
I've been to you a true and humble wife;
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
He hath kindled his wrath against me, and counteth me as one of his enemies. Job xix. 11.
Thus one by one kindling each other's fire,
'Till all inflam'd, they all in one agree. Daniel's Civ. War.

- Ye heav'n's, from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in soft silence shed the kindly show'r! Pope.
- KINDNESS. n. f. [from kind.] Benevolence; beneficence;
good will; favour; love.
If there be kindness, meekness, or comfort in her tongue, then is not her husband like other men. Ecclesi. xxxvi. 23.
Old Lelius professes he had an extraordinary kindness for several young people. Collier of Friendship.
Ever blest be Cytherea's shrine,
Since thy dear breast has felt an equal wound,
Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd. Prior.
Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us. Rogers's Sermons.
- KINDRED. n. f. [from kin; cynne, Saxon.]
- Relation by birth or marriage; cognation; affinity.
Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
You keep her conquests, and extend your own. Dryden.
 - Relation; sort.
His horse hipp'd with an old mothy saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew.
 - Relatives.
I think there is no man secure
But the queen's kindred. Shakespeare. Richard III.
Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt
Of Eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain. Denham.
- KINDRED. adj. Congenial; related; cognate.
From Tuscan Corintum he claim'd his birth;
But after, when exempt from mortal earth,
From thence ascended to his kindred skies
A god. Dryden.
- KINE. n. f. plur. from cow.
To milk the kine,
E'er the milk-maid fine
Hath open'd her eyne. Ben. Johnson.
A field I went, amid' the morning dew,
To milk my kine. Gay.
- KING. n. f. [A contraction of the Teutonic word king, or cyning, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength. Versteegan.]
- Monarch; supreme governour.
The great king of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt do no murder. Shakespeare. R. III.
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakespeare. Merch. of Venice.
True hope is swift, and flies with swallows wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings. Shakespeare.
The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stateness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Thus states were form'd; the name of king unknown,
'Till common int'rest plac'd the sway in one;
'Twas virtue only, or in arts or arms,
Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
The same which in a fire the sons obey'd,
A prince the father of a people made. Pope.
 - It is taken by Bacon in the feminine: as prince also is.
Ferdinand and Isabella, kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors. Bacon.
 - A card with the picture of a king.
The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen. Pope.
- KING at Arms. or of heralds, a principal officer at arms, that has the pre-eminence of the society; of whom there are three in number, viz. Garter, Norroy, and Clarenceux.
Phillips.
A letter under his own hand was lately shewed me by fir
William Dugdale, king at arms. Walton.
- To KING. v. a. [from the noun.]
- To supply with a king.
England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
By a vain, giddy, shallow, humorous youth,
That fear attends her not. Shakespeare's Henry V.
 - To make royal; to raise to royalty.
Sometimes am I a king;
Then treason makes me with myself a beggar,
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again. Shakespeare's Richard II.
- KINGAPPLE. n. f. A kind of apple.
The kingapple is preferred before the jenneting. Mortimer.
- KINGCRAFT. n. f. [king and craft.] The act of governing.
A word commonly used by king James. KINGCRAFT.

KIN

- KINGCUP. n. f. [king and cup.] A flower June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass green, and upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair. Peach.
Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay.
- KINGDOM. n. f. [from king.]
1. The dominion of a king; the territories subject to a monarch.
You're welcome,
Most learned, reverend sir, into our kingdom. Shakep.
Moses gave unto them the kingdom of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Bashan. Numb. xxxii.
2. A different class or order of beings. A word chiefly used among naturalists.
The animal and vegetable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you take the lowest of one, and the highest of the other, there will scarce be perceived any difference. Locke.
3. A region; a tract.
The wat'ry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. Shakep. Merch. of Ven.
KINGFISHER. n. f. A species of bird.
When dew refreshing on the pasture fields
The moon bellows, kingfishers play on shore. May's Virgil.
Bitterns, herons, sea-gulls, kingfishers, and water-rats, are great enemies to fish. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- KINGLIKE. adj. [from king.]
KINGLY. adj.
1. Royal; sovereign; monarchial.
There we'll sit,
Ruling in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms. Shakep.
Yet this place
Had been thy kingly feat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come To reverence thee. Dryden's State of Innocence.
In Sparta, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.
The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.
2. Belonging to a king.
Why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
A watch-cake to a common larum-bell? Shakep. H. IV.
Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
What husband in thy power I will command. Shakep. Henry IV.
3. Noble; august.
He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprizes. Sidney.
I am far better born than is the king;
More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts. Shakep.
KINGLY. adv. With an air of royalty; with superior dignity.
Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state Inclin'd not. Milt. Parad. Lost.
His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with reverence took, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod. Dunciad.
KINGSEVIL. n. f. [king and evil.] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of the king.
Sore eyes are frequently a species of the kingsevil, and take their beginning from vicious humours inflaming the tunica adnata. Wise's Surgery.
- KINGSHIP. n. f. [from king.] Royalty; monarchy.
They designed and proposed to me the new modelling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. K. Charles.
We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.
- KINGSPEAR. n. f. A plant.
The stalk is round, smooth, strong, and branchy; the leaves like those of a leek, but stronger and narrower: the flowers are divided commonly as far as the basis, naked, stel-lated, and embracing the ovary like a calyx: the apex of the ovary puts forth six stamens, and a long tube from the centre, which becomes a roundish fruit, carnosus, triangular, divided into three partitions inclosing triangular seeds. Miller.
- KINGSTONE. n. f. A fish. Ainsworth.
- KINGSFOLK. n. f. [kin and folk.] Relations; those who are of the same family.
Those lords, since their first grants of those lands, have bestowed them amongst their kingfalks. Spenser.
My kingfalk have failed, and my familiar friends forgotten me. Job xix. 14.
- KINSMAN. n. f. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.

KIT

- The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser.
Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
Whom kinmen to the crown the heralds deem'd. Dryden.
Let me stand excluded from my right,
Robb'd of my kinman's arms, who first appear'd in fight.
Dryden's Cæsar.
- There is a branch of the Medicis in Naples: the head of it has been owned as a kinman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. Addison on Italy.
- KINSWOMAN. n. f. [kin and woman.] A female relation.
A young noble lady, near kinwoman to the fair Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither. Sidney.
The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinwoman. Dennis's Letters.
- KIRK. n. f. [cynce, Saxon; κίρκη, Greek.] An old word for a church, yet retained in Scotland.
Home they hasten the posts to dight,
And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,
With hawthorn buds, and sweet eglantine. Spenser.
Nor is it all the nation hath these spots,
There is a church as well as kirk of Scots. Cleaveland.
What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. King Charles.
- KIRTLE. n. f. [cynzel, Saxon.] An upper garment; a gown.
All in a kirtle of discoloured fay
He clothed was. Fairy Queen.
What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? Thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. Shakep. Henry IV.
Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy poeies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Raleigh.
- KISS. v. a. [cusan, Welsh; visu.]
1. To touch with the lips.
But who those ruddy lips can kiss,
Which blest still themselves do kiss. Sidney.
He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other. Shak. R. III.
2. To treat with fondness.
The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shak. H. VIII.
3. To touch gently.
The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakep. Merch. of Venice.
- KISS. n. f. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.
What fense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shakep. Othello.
Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.
- KISSER. n. f. [from kiss.] One that kisses.
- KISSINGCRUST. n. f. [kissing and crust.] Crust formed where one loaf in the oven touches another.
These bak'd him kissingcrusts, and those Brought him small beer. King's Cookery.
- KITT. n. f. [kutte, Dutch.]
1. A large bottle.
2. A small diminutive fiddle.
'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing-master's kit. Grew's Museum.
3. A small wooden vessel, in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town.
- KITCHEN. n. f. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flemish; cykene, Sax.
cuisine, French; cucina, Italian; kitchens, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.
These being culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser.
Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hooker.
He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown. Bacon.
We see no new built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.
- KITCHENGARDEN. n. f. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.
Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchengardens. Bacon.
A kitchengarden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. Spektator.
- KITCHENMAID. n. f. [kitchen and maid.] A cookmaid.
- KITCHENSTUFF. n. f. [kitchen and stuff.] The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan. As.

KNA

- As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barreling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year,
Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer. Donne.
Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel preaching ministry. Hudibras.
- KITCHENWENCH. n. f. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery. Shakep. Henry IV.
Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Swift.
Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench. Swift.
- KITCHENWORK. n. f. [kitchen and work.] Cookery; work done in the kitchen.
- KITE. n. f. [cýra, Saxon.]
1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.
Ravenous crows and kites Shakep. Julius Caesar.
Fly o'er our heads. Shakep. R. III.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakep. R. III.
The heron, when she soareth high, for as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather. Bacon.
A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.
2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.
Detested kite! thou liest. Shakep. King Lear.
3. A fictitious bird made of paper.
A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Grov. of the Tongue.
- KITESFOOT. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.
- KITTEN. n. f. [kattien, Dutch.] A young cat.
That a mare will sooner drown than an horse is not experienced, nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown's Vulg. Err.
It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Wise's Surgery.
Helen was just flit into bed;
Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,
Away the kitten with them fled,
As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.
To KITTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.
So it would have done
At the same season, if your mother's cat
Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shakep.
The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak, and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it. L'Estrange.
- TO KLUCK. v. n. [from clack.]
1. To make a small sharp noise.
2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer or steal away suddenly with a snatch.
- TO KNAAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erse.] To bite.
Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; to as that knab and knap may be the same.
I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares. L'Estrange.
An ass was withling, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knap upon. L'Estr.
- KNACK. n. f. [cnac, Welsh, fly knavery; cnapunge, skill, Sax.]
1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.
When I was young, I was wont
To load my teeth with knacks: I would have ranfack'd
The pedlar's filken treasury, and have pour'd it To her acceptance. Shakep. Winter's Tale.
For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thou do'st but sigh
That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success. Shakep.
This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; fie, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakep. Henry IV.
But it's not presumption to write verse to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
Alas, what are they but poems in prose! Denham.
He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.
2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.
I'll teach you the knacks
Of eating of flax,
And out of their noses
Draw ribbands and poies. Ben. Johnson's Gypsies.
The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the deperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.
There is a certain knack in the art of conversation that gives a good grace to many things, by the manner and address of handling them. L'Estrange.
Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack
Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.
My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes

KNA

- another, about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.
The dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.
3. A nice trick.
For how should equal colours do the knack? Pope.
Cameleons who can paint in white and black?
To KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks. Ainsworth.
- KNA'CKER. n. f. [from knack.]
1. A maker of small work.
One part for plow-wright, cartwright, knacker, and smith.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
2. A ropemaker. [Reslio, Latin.] Ainsworth.
- KNAG. n. f. [knag, a wart, Danish. It is retain'd in Scotland.]
A hard knot in wood.
KNAGGY. adj. [from knag.] Knotty; set with hard rough knots.
KNAP. n. f. [cnap, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece;
cnæp, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance; a swelling prominence.
You shall see many fine seats set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathereth as in troughs. Bacon.
- TO KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]
1. To bite; to break short.
He knappeth the spear in sunder. Common Prayer.
He will knapp the spears a-pieces with his teeth. Mor.
2. [Knaap, Erse.] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.
Knapp a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the sound of the tongs. Bacon's Natural Hist.
TO KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.
I reduced shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knapp in before they knew they were out. Wise's Surgery.
TO KNAPPLE. v. n. [from knapp.] To break off with a sharp quick noise. Ainsworth.
- KNAPSACK. n. f. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.
The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, 'till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.
If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in Summer, and barns in Winter to be found: I with my kna sack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel 'till we come to the ridge of the world.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
- KNA'PWEED. n. f. [jacca, Latin.]
This is one of the headed plants destitute of spines: the cup is squamose; the borders of the leaves are equal, being neither serrated nor indented: the florets round the border of the head are barren; but those placed in the center are succeeded each by one seed, having a down adhering to it. There are fifty species of this plant, thirteen of which grow wild in England, and the rest are exotics. Miller.
- KNARE. n. f. [knor, German.] A hard knot.
A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground,
And prickly stubs instead of trees are found;
Or woods with knots and knarres deform'd and old,
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.
- KNAVE. n. f. [cnapa, Saxon.]
1. A boy; a male child.
2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.
For as the moon the eye doth please
With gentle beams not hurting sight,
Yet hath fir sun the greater praise,
Because from him doth come her light;
So if my man must praise have,
What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.
He eats and drinks with his domestick slaves;
A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.
3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.
Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South's Sermons.
When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.
An honest man may take a knave's advice;
But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.
See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.
4. A card with a soldier painted on it.
For 'twill return, and turn 't account,
If we are brought in play upon't,
Or but by casting knaves get in,
What pow'r can hinder us to win? Hudibras.
- KNAVERY. n. f. [from knave.]
1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villainy.
Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together. Shakep. Henry IV.
If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do't; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakep. Winter's Tale.

KNE

Here's the folly of the ass in trusting the fox, and here's the knavery of the fox in betraying the ass. L'Estrange.
The cunning courtier should be slighted too;
Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;
'Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,
Like Asop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.
2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps for trifling things of more cost than use.
We'll revel it as bravely as the best,
With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knavery. Shakef.
KNA'VISH, adj. [from knave.]
1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.
'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knavish to do it from friends. Pope's Letters.
2. Waggish; mischievous.
Here she comes cuffed and fad;
Cupid is a knavish lad,
Thus to make poor females mad. Shakef.
KNA'VISHLY, adv. [from knave.]
1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.
2. Waggishly; mischievously.
To KNEAD, v. a. [cnæban, Saxon; kneeden, Dutch.] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.
Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakef.
It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be;
Wisdom makes him an ark where all agree. Donne.
Thus kneaded up with milk the new made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
'Till knowledge misapp'ly'd, misunderstanding,
And pride of empire, four'd his balmy blood. Dryden.
One paste of flesh on all degrees betow'd,
And kneaded up alike with moist'ning blood. Dryden.
Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart, seasoned it with most furious particles of the lion. Addison's Spectator.
No man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,
Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,
That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.
The cake she kneaded was the fav'ry meat. Prior.
KNEADINGTROUGH, n. f. [knead and trough.] A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.
Frogs shall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Ex. viii. 3.
KNEE, n. f. [cneop, Saxon; knee, Dutch.]
1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.
Thy royal father
Was a most faint king: the queen that bore thee,
Often upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakef.
I have reserved to myself seven thousand, who have not bowed the knee to Baal. Ro. xi. 4.
Scotch flink is a kind of strong nourishment, made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.
I beg and clasp thy knees. Milton.
Weary'd with length of ways, worn out with toil,
To lay down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;
And cast her languishing regards above,
For help from heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.
Disdainful of Campania's gentle plains,
When for them the must bend the servile knee. Thomson.
2. A knee is a piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Mason's Mach. Exer.
Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tossed; but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.
To KNEEL, v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.
Go you that banish'd him, a mile before his tent, fall down, and kneel the way into his mercy. Shakef.
Return with her!
Why, the hot-blooded France, that down'rls took Our youngest born: I could as well be brought To kneel his throne, and squire-like pension beg. Shakef.
KNEED, adj. [from knee.]
1. Having knees: as in-kneed, or out-kneed.
2. Having joints: as kneecracks.
KNEEDEEP, adj. [from knee and deep.]
1. Rising to the knees.
2. Sunk to the knees.
The country peasant meditates no harm,
When clad with skins of beasts to keep him warm;
In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,
Almost kneedeep, through mire in clumsy shoes. Dryden.

I would not wish them to a fairer death,
And so his kneel is knoll'd. Shakef.
Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark, now I hear them. Shak. Tempest.
When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stir'd
With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shak. H. VIII.
All these motions, which we saw,
Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.
Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
Unhappy 'till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.
At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung;
The am'rous youth around her bow'd:
At night her fatal knell was rung;
I saw, and kiss'd her in her shroud. Prior.

Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw.
The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The beast of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden's En.
Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,
And, trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dryd.
Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.
KNIGHT, n. f. [cnipr, Sax. knecht, Germ. a servant, or pupil.]
1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.
'That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenser.
Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forested place. Spenser.
When every case in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight. Shak. King Lear.
Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that flew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakef.
This knight; but yet why should I call him knight,
To give impiety to this rev'rent stile. Daniel's Civil War.

In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.
2. Among us the order of gentlemen next to the nobility, except the baronets.
The knight intends to make his appearance. Addison.
3. A champion.
He suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post.
Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight against their king. Denham.
And raise the first sedition?
KNIGHT ERRANT, [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in quest of adventures.
Like a bold knight errant did proclaim Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.

KNI

The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in fights;
They cut whole giants into fitters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.
KNIGHT ERRANT, [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.
That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needless encounters. Norris.

One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.
KNIGHTLY, adj. [from knight.] Becoming a knight; becoming a knight.
Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.
How darest thou pride presume against my laws?
As in a fitted field to fight your cause:
Unask'd the royal grant, no martial by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.
KNIGHTHOOD, n. f. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.
For that same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made by his almighty art,
For that his nourling, when he knighted swore,
Therewith to do his foes eternal smart. Fairy Queen.
Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And lo defend thee heaven and thy valour. Shak. R. II.
Is this the sir, who some waste wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a wooing in. Ben. Johnson.

they do not well know, they would nevertheless seem to others to know of that which they may not well speak.

Bacon's Essays, N^o. 27.

Not to know of things remote, but know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom. Milton.
In the other world there is no consideration that will sting our consciences more cruelly than this, that we did wickedly, when we knew to have done better; and chose to make ourselves miserable, when we understood the way to have been happy. Tillotson's Sermons.
They might understand those excellencies which they blindly valued, so as not to be farther imposed upon by bad pieces, and to know when nature was well imitated by the most able masters. Dryden's DuRoi.

3. To be informed.

The prince and Mr. Pains put on two of our jerkins and aprons, and sir John must not know of it.

1. Skillful; well instructed; remote from ignorance. You have heard, and with a knowing ear, That he, which hath our noble father slain, Purloin'd my life. Shaks. Hamlet.

The knowingst of these have of late reformed their hypocrisies. Boyle.

What makes the clergy glorious is to be knowing in their profession, unsupported in their lives, active and laborious in their charges. South.

The necessity of preparing for the offices of religion was a lesson which the mere light and dictates of common reason, without the help of revelation, taught all the knowing and intelligent part of the world. South's Sermons.

Gio Bellino, one of the first who of any consideration at Venice, painted very dilly, according to the manner of his time: he was very knowing both in architecture and perspective. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

All animals of the same kind, which form a society, are more knowing than others. Addison's Guardian.

2. Conscious; intelligent.

Could any but a knowing prudent Cause Begin such motions and assign such laws? If the Great Mind had form'd a different frame, Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.

KNOWING. n. f. [from know.] Knowledge.

Let him be to entertain'd as suits gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality. Shakespeare.

KNOWINGLY. adv. [from knowing.] With skill; with knowledge.

He knowingly and wittingly brought evil into the world. Moré's Divine Dialogues.

They who before were rather fond of it than knowingly admired it, might defend their inclination by their reason. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To the private duties of the closet he repaired, as often as he entered upon any business of consequence: I speak knowingly. Atterbury's Sermons.

KNOWLEDGE. n. f. [from know.]

1. Certain perception; indubitable apprehension.

Knowledge, which is the highest degree of the speculative faculties, consists in the perception of the truth of affirmative or negative propositions. Locke.

2. Learning; illumination of the mind.

Ignorance is the curse of God, Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n. Shakespeare.

3. Skill in any thing.

Do but say to me what I should do, That in your knowledge may by me be done, And I am prest unto it. Shaks. Merchant of Venice.

4. Acquaintance with any fact or person.

The dog straight fawned upon his master for old knowledge. Sidney.

This is not forgot, Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge I never in my life did look on him. Shakespeare. Rich. II.

5. Cognizance; notice.

Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger? Ruth ii. 10.

A state's anger should not take Knowledge either of fools or women. Ben. Johnson's Catil.

6. Information; power of knowing.

I pulled off my headpieces, and humbly entreated their pardon, or knowledge why he was cruel. Sidney.

To KNOWLEDGE. v. a. [not in use.] To acknowledge; to avow.

The prophet Hosea tells us that God faith of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me; which proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow: for though they be ordained by his secret providence, yet they are not known by his revealed will. Bacon's holy Warr.

To KNOWLEDGE. v. a. [knípler, Danish.] To beat. Skinner.

KN U

KNU'CKLE. n. f. [knucle, Saxon; knackle, Dutch.]
 1. The joints of the fingers protuberant when the fingers close.
 Thus often at the Temple-stairs we've seen
 Two tritons, of a rough athletic mien,
 Sourly dispute some quarrel of the flood,
 With knuckles bruised, and face befear'd in blood. Garth.
 2. The knee joint of a calf.
 We find also that Scotch skinck, which is a pottage of strong nourishment, is made with the knees and finews of beef, but long boiled: jelly also, which they used for a restorative, is chiefly made of knuckles of veal. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 3. The articulation or joint of a plant.
 Divers herbs have joints or knuckles, as it were stops in their germination; as gillyflowers, pinks, fennel, and corn.
Bacon's Natural History.
 To KNU'CKLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To submit: I suppose from an odd custom of striking the under side of the table with the knuckles, in confession of an argumental defeat.
 KNU'CKLED. adj. [from knuckle.] Jointed.
 The reed or cane is a watry plant, and groweth not but in the water: it hath these properties, that it is hollow, and it is knuckled both stalk and root; that, being dry, it is more hard and fragile than other wood; that it putteth forth no boughs, though many stalks out of one root. Bacon's Nat. History.

K Y D

 KNUFF. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from knave, or the same with chuff.] A lout. An old word preserved in a rhyme of prediction.
 The country knuff, Hob, Dick, and Hick,
 With clubs and clouted thoon,
 Shall fill up Duffendale
 With slaughtered bodies soon. Hayward.

L

LAB RICH?WARREN LAB

L, A liquid consonant, which preserves always the same sound in English. In the Saxon it was aspirated a play, loaf; pleopox, lady.

At the end of a monosyllable it is always doubled; as, ball, still, full, except after a diphthong; as, fail, feel, deal, cool. In a word of more syllables it is written single; as, channel, caval, tendrill. It is sometimes put before s, and founded feebly after it; as bible; title.

LA. interj. [corrupted by an effeminate pronunciation from lo.] See; look; behold.

La you! if you speak ill of the devil,
How he takes it at heart. Shakes. Twelfth Night.

LABDANUM. n. f. A resin of the softer kind, of a strong and not unpleasing smell, and an aromatick, but not agreeable taste. This juice exudates from a low spreading shrub, of the cistus kind, in Crete, and the neighbouring islands; and the Grecian women make balls of it with a small admixture of ambergrate, by way of a perfume. It was formerly used externally in medicine, but is now neglected. Hill.

To LABEY. v. a. [labefacio, Latin.] To weaken; to impair.

LABEL. n. f. [labellum, Latin.]

1. A small slip or scrap of writing.
When wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing
Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. Any thing appendant to a larger writing.
On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impressed from the papal seal. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In law.] A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending seal. So also any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or testament, is called a label or codicil. Harris.

God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
And ere this hand by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Shakespeare.

LABENT. adj. [labens, Lat.] Sliding; gliding; slipping. Di.

LABIAL. adj. [labialis, Latin.] Uttered by the lips.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon's Natural History.

Some particular affection of sound in its passage to the lips, will seem to make some composition in any vowel which is labial. Holder's Elements of Speech.

LABIATED. adj. [labium, Latin.] Formed with lips.

LABIODENTAL. adj. [labium and dentalis.] Formed or pronounced by the co-operation of the lips and teeth.

The dental consonants are very easy; and first the labiodentals f, v, also the linguadentals th, dh. Hold. Elem. of Sp.

LABORANT. n. f. [laborans, Lat.] A chemist. Not in use.

I can shew you a sort of fixt sulphur, made by an industrious laborant. Boyle.

LABORATORY. n. f. [laboratoire, French.] A chemist's work-room.

It would contribute to the history of colours, if chemists would in their laboratory take a heedful notice, and give us a faithful account, of the colours observed in the steam of bodies, either sublimed or distilled. Boyle on Colours.

The flames of love will perform those miracles they of the furnace boast of, would they employ themselves in this laboratory. Decay of Piety.

LABORIOUS. adj. [laborieux, French; laboriosus, Latin.]

1. Diligent in work; assiduous.

That which makes the clergy glorious, is to be knowing in their professions, unspotted in their lives, active and laborious in their charges, bold and resolute in opposing seducers, and daring to look vice in the face; and lastly, to be gentle, courteous, and compassionate to all. South's Sermon.

To his laborious youth consum'd in war,
And lasting age, adorn'd and crown'd with peace. Prior.

2. Requiring labour; tiresome; not easy.

A spacious cave within its farthest part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryd. Æn. 6.

Do't thou love watchings, abstinence, and toil,
Laborious virtues all? learn them from Cato. Add. Cato.

LABORIOUSLY. adv. [from laborious.] With labour; with toil.

The folly of him, who pumps very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak. Decay of Piety.

I chuse laboriously to bear
A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope's Ody.

LABORIOUSNESS. n. f. [from laborious.]

1. Toilomeness; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the gainlessness as well as the laboriousness of the work; those wretched creatures, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the insatiate miser. Decay of Piety.

2. Diligence; assiduity.

LABOUR, n. f. [labour, French; labor, Latin.]

1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength, or wearisome perseverance; pains; toil; travail; work.

If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, it is labour well bestowed. Shakes. M. W. of Windsor.

I sent to know your faith, lest the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. 1 Thes. iii. 5.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker.

You were wont to say,
If you had been the wife of Hercules
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband to much sweat. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Exercise; motion with some degree of violence.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and curing many initial diseases; but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

4. Childbirth; travail.

Sith of womens labours thou hast charge,
And generation goodly doest enlarge,
Incline thy will to effect our wishful vow. Spens. Epith.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pain;
My throws come thicker, and my cries encreas'd,
Which with her hand the conscious nurse suppress'd. Dryd.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour. Gravitt.

His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs 'till it be delivered. South's Sermon.

TO LABOUR. v. n. [labore, Latin.]

1. To toil; to act with painful effort.

When shall I come to th' top of that same hill?
—You do climb up it now; look how we labour. Shakes.

For your highness' good I ever labour'd,
More than mine own. Shakespeare's Hen. VIII.

—None but the fool, who labours to out-jest
His heart-struck injuries. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Let more work be laid upon the men, that they may labour therein. Exod. v. 9.

2. To do work; to take pains.

Epaphras saluteth you, always labouring fervently for you in prayers, that ye may stand perfect. Col. iv. 12.

A labouring man that is given to drunkenness shall not be rich. Ecclesi. xix. 1.

That in the night they may be a guard to us, and labour on the day. Neb. iv. 22.

Yet is there no end of all his labours; neither faith he, for whom do I labour. Ecclesi. iv. 8.

LAB

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of. Locke.

3. To move with difficulty.
The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the labourer's toil, returning still,
Is love. Granville.

4. To be diseased with. [Morbo laborare, Latin.]
They abound with horfe,
Of which one want our camp doth only labour,
And I have found 'em coming. Bon. Johnson's Catiline.
I was called to another, who in childbed laboured of an ulcer in her left hip. Wifeman.

5. To be in distress; to be pressed.
To this infernal lake the fury flies,
Here hides her hated head, and frees the lab'ring skies. Dryd.
Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the Throne,
As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon. Dryd. Aur.
This exercise will call down the favour of heaven upon you, to remove those afflictions you now labour under from you. Wake's Preparation for Death.

6. To be in child-birth; to be in travail.
There lay a log unlighted on the earth,
When she was lab'ring in the throws of birth;
For th' unborn chief the fatal flitters came,
And rais'd it up, and tofs'd it on the flame. Dryd. Ovid.
Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring God. Pope.
He is so touch'd with the memory of her benevolence and protection, that his soul labours for an expression enough to represent it. Notes on the Odyssey.

To LABOUR. v. a.
1. To work at; to move with difficulty; to form with labour; to prosecute with effect.
To use brevity, and avoid much labouring of the work, is to be granted to him that will make an abridgment. 2. Mac.
The matter of the ceremonies had wrought, for the most part, only upon light-headed, weak men, whose satisfaction was not to be laboured for. Clarendon.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus shall feel,
And Sisyphus that labours up the hill,
The rowling rock in vain, and curst Ixion's wheel. Dryd.
Had you requir'd my helpful hand,
Th' artificer and art you might command,
To labour arms for Troy. Dryden's Æneis.
An eager desire to know something concerning him, has occasioned mankind to labour the point under these disadvantages, and turn on all hands to see if there were any thing left which might have the least appearance of information. Pope's Essay on Homer.

2. To beat; to labour.
Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroak. Dryden's Virg.

LABOURER. n. f. [labourer, French.]
1. One who is employed in coarse and toilsome work.
If a state run most to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their work-folks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot. Bacon.
The sun but seem'd the lab'rer of the year,
Each waxing moon supply'd her wat'ry store,
To swell those tides, which from the line did bear
Their brimful vessels to the Belgian shore. Dryden.
Labourers and idle persons, children and striplings, old men and young men, must have divers diets. Arbutn. on Aliments.
Not show'is to larks, or sun-shine to the bee,
Are half so charming, as thy fight to me. Pope's Autumn.
Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed,
Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The lab'rer bears. Pope, Ep. iv. l. 167.
The prince cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee; nor the merchant to the labourer, I have no need of thee. Swift's Miscel.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.
Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat; get that I wear; owe no man hate; envy no man's happiness. Shakesp.
The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the lab'rer's toil, returning still,
Is love. Granville.

LABOURSOME. adj. [from labour.] Made with great labour and diligence.
Forget
Your labour'some and dainty trims, wherein You made great Jove angry. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
He hath, my lord, by labour'some petition,
Wrung from me my flow leave. Shakesp. Hamlet.
LABRA. n. f. [Spanish.] A lip.
Word of denial in thy labras here;
Word of denial, froth and scum thou liest. Shakesp.

LABYRINTH. n. f. [labyrinthus, Latin.] A maze; a place formed with inextricable windings.
Suffolk, stay;

LAC

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;
There Minotaurs, and ugly treasors lurk. Shakesp.
Words, which would tear
The tender labyrinth of a maid's soft ear. Donne.
My clamorous tear
The ear's soft labyrinth, and cleft the air. Sandy's Paraph.
The ear of Effex had not proceeded with his accustomed wariness and skill; but run into labyrinths, from whence he could not disentangle himself. Clarendon, b. viii.
My soul is on her journey; do not now
Divert, or lead her back, to lose herself
I th' maze and winding labyrinths o' th' world. Denham.

LAC. n. f.
Lac is usually distinguished by the name of a gum, but improperly, because it is inflammable and not soluble in water. We have three sorts of it, which are all the product of the same tree. 1. The stick lac. 2. The seed lac. 3. The shell lac. Authors leave us uncertain whether this drug belongs to the animal or the vegetable kingdom. Hill.

LACE. n. f. [lacet, French; laqueus, Latin.]
1. A string; a cord.
There the fond fly entangled, struggled long,
Himself to free thereout; but all in vain;
For striving more, the more in laces frong
Himself he tied, and wrapt his wings twain
In liny snares, the subtil loops among. Spenser.

2. A snare; a gin.
The king had snared been in love's strong lace. Fairfax.

3. A platted string, with which women fasten their clothes.
O! cut my lace, lest my heart crackling, it Break too. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Doll ne'er was call'd to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face. Swift.

4. Ornaments of fine thread curiously woven.
Our English dames are much given to the wearing of costly laces; and, if they be brought from Italy, they are in great esteem. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

5. Textures of thread, with gold or silver.
He wears a stuff, whose thread is coarse and round,
But trimm'd with curious lace. Herbert.

6. Sugar. A cant word.
If haply he the sect pursues,
That read and comment upon news;
He takes up their mysterious lace,
He drinks his coffee without lace. Prior.

To LACE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten with a string run through eilet holes.
I caus'd a fomentation to be made, and put on a laced sock, by which the weak parts were strengthened. Wifeman.
At this, for new replies he did not stay,
But lac'd his crested helm, and strode away.
These glittering spoils, now made the victor's gain,
He to his body suits; but suits in vain:
Messapus' helm he finds among the rest,
And laces on, and wears the waving crest. Dryd. Æneis.
Like Mrs. Primly's great belly; the may lace it down before, but it burnishes on her hips. Congr. Way of the World.
When Jenny's stays are newly lac'd,
Fair Alma plays about her waist.
To adorn with gold or silver textures sewed on.
It is but a night-gown in respect of yours; cleath of gold and coats, and lac'd with silver. Shakesp. Much ado about Not.

3. To embellish with variegations.
Look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder East;
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tip-toe on the misty mountains tops. Shakesp.
Then clap four slices of plaster on't,
That, lac'd with bits of rustick, makes a front. Pope.

4. To beat; whether from the form which L'Estrange uses, or by corruption of lasp.
Go you, and find me out a man that has no curiosity at all, or I'll lace your coat for ye. L'Estrange.

LACED MUTTON. An old word for a whore.
Ay, Sir, I, a lost mutton, gave your letter to her a lac'd mutton, and she gave me nothing for my labour. Shakesp.

LACEMAN. n. f. [lace and man.] One who deals in lace.
I met with a nonjuror, engaged with a laceman, whether the late French king was most like Augustus Cæsar, or Nero. Addison's Spectator, N. 404.

LACERABLE. adj. [from lacerate.] Such as may be torn.
Since the lungs are obliged to a perpetual commerce with the air, they must necessarily lie open to great damages, because of their thin and lacerable compofigure. Harvey.

To LACERATE. v. a. [lacerare, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to separate by violence.
And my ions lacerate and rip up, viper like, the womb that brought them forth. Howell's England's Tears.
The heat breaks through the water, so as to buoy up, and lift up great bubbles too heavy for the air to buoy up, and causeth boiling. Derham's Physico-Theology.

Here lacerated friendship claims a tear. Va. of human Wishes.

LACERATION. n. f. [from lacerate.] The act of tearing or rending; the breach made by tearing.
The effects are, extension of the great vessels, compression of the lesser, and lacerations upon small cautes. Arbutn.

LACERATIVE. adj. [from lacerate.] Tearing; having the power to tear.
Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated, others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours. Harvey on Consumptions.

LACHRYMAL. adj. [lachrymal, French.] Generating tears.
It is of an exquisite sence, that, upon any touch, the tears might be squeezed from the lachrymal glands, to wash and clean it. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

LACHRYMARY. adj. [lachryma, Latin.] Containing tears.
How many drelles are there for each particular deity? what a variety of shapes in the ancient urns, lamps, and lachrymary vessels. Addison's Travels through Italy.

LACHRYMATION. n. f. [from lachryma.] The act of weeping, or shedding tears.

LACHRYMATORY. n. f. [lachrymatore, French.] A vessel in which tears are gathered to the honour of the dead.

LACINIATED. adj. [from lacinia, Lat.] Adorned with fringes and borders.

To LACK. v. a. [lacken, to lessen, Dutch.] To want; to need; to be without.
Every good and holy desire, though it lack the form, hath notwithstanding in itself the substance, and with him the force of prayer, who regardeth the true meanings, groans, and sighs of the heart. Hooker, b. v. l. 348.
A hand wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness; thou shalt not lack any thing in it. Deut. viii. 9.
One day we hope thou shalt bring back,
Dear Bolingbroke, the justice that we lack. Daniel.
Intreat they may; authority they lack. Daniel.

To LACK. v. n.
1. To be in want.
The lions do lack and suffer hunger. Common Prayer.

2. To be wanting.
Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous; wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? Gen. viii. 28.
There was nothing lacking to them: David recovered all. 1 Sam. xxx. 19.
That which was lacking on your part, they have supplied. 1 Cor. xvi. 17.

LACK. n. f. [from the noun.]
1. Want; need; failure.
In the scripture there neither wanteth any thing, the lack whereof might deprive us of life. Hooker, b. i. p. 41.
Many that are not mad
Have sure more lack of reason. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.
He was not able to keep that place three days, for lack of victuals. Knolles's History of the Turks.
The trenchant blade, Toledo trusty,
For want of fighting was grown rusty,
And eat into itself, for lack
Of somebody to hew and hack. Hadibras, p. i. c. 1.

2. Lack, whether noun or verb, is now almost obsolete.

LACUBRAIN. n. f. [lack and brain.] One that wants wit.
What a lacubrain is this? Our plot is as good a plot as ever was laid. Shakesp. Henry IV. p. i.

LACKER. n. f. A kind of varnish, which, spread upon a white substance, exhibits a gold colour.

To LACKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To do over with lacker.
What shook the stage, and made the people stare?
Cato's long wing, flower'd gown, and lacker'd chair. Pope.

LACKEY. n. f. [laquais, French.] An attending servant; a foot-boy.
They would flame to make me
Wait else at door: a fellow counsellor,
Mong boys, and grooms, and lackies! Shakesp. Hen. VIII.
Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He's cautious to avoid the coach and fix,
And on the lackies will no quarrel fix. Dryden's Juvenal.
Lackies were never so faucy and pragmatical as they are now-a-days. Addison's Spectator, N. 481.

To LACKEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To attend servilely.
I know not whether Milton has used this word very properly.
This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, lacquing the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopatra.
So dear to heav'n is faintly chaffity,
That when a soul is found sincerely so,
A thousand liveried angels lackey her,
Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt. Milton.

To LACKEY. v. n. To act as a foot-boy; to pay servile attendance.
Oft have I servants seen on horfes ride,
The free and noble lacquey by their side. Sandy's Par.
Our Italian translator of the Æneis is a foot poet; he lackey by the side of Virgil, but never mounts behind him. Dryd. Ded. Æn.

LAD

LACLINEN. adj. [lack and linen.] Wanting shirts.
I scorn you, scurvy companion; what? your poor, bafe, rascally, cheating, lacklinen mate; away, you mouldy rogue, away; I'm made for your master. Shakesp. Henry IV.

LACLUSTRE. adj. [lack and lustre.] Wanting brightness.
And then he drew a dial from his poke,
And looking on it with lacklustre eye,
Says very wilely, it is ten a clock. Shakesp.

LACONICK. adj. [laconicus, Lat. laconique, Fr.] Short; brief; from Lacones, the Spartans, who used few words.
I grow laconick even beyond laconicifm; for sometimes I return only yes, or no, to questionnaire or petitionary epistles of half a yard long. Pope to Swift.

LACONISM. n. f. [laconisme, French; laconismus, Latin.] A concise stile: called by Pope laconicifm. See LACONICK.
As the language of the face is universal, so it is very comprehensive: no laconifm can reach it. It is the shorthand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room. Collier of the Affect.

LACONICALLY. adv. [from laconick.] Briefly; concisely.
Alexander Nequam, a man of great learning, and desirous to enter into religion there, writ to the abbot laconically. Candian's Remains.

LACTARY. adj. [lactis, Lat.] Milky; full of juice like milk.
From lactary, or milky plants, which have a white and lacteous juice dispersed through every part, there arise flowers blue and yellow. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 10.

LACTARY. n. f. [lactarium, Latin.] A dairy house.

LACTATION. n. f. [lactio, Latin.] The act or time of giving suck.

LACTEAL. adj. [from lac, Latin.] Conveying chyle.
As the food passes, the chyle, which is the nutritive part, is separated from the excrementitious by the lacteal veins; and from thence conveyed into the blood. Locke.

LACTEAL. n. f. The vessel that conveys chyle.
The mouths of the lacteals may permit aliment, acrimonious or not, sufficiently attenuated, to enter in people of lax constitutions, whereas their sphincters will shut against them in such as have strong fibres. Arbutn. on Aliments.

LACTEOUS. adj. [lacteus, Latin.]
1. Milky.
Though we leave out the lacteous circle, yet are there more by four than Philo mentions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Lacteal; conveying chyle.
The lungs are suitable for respiration, and the lacteous vessels for the reception of the chyle. Bentley's Serm.

LACTESCENCE. n. f. [lactesco, Latin.] Tendency to milk.
This lactescence does commonly ensue, when wine, being impregnated with gums, or other vegetable concretions, that abound with sulphureous corpuscles, fair water is suddenly poured upon the solution. Boyle on Colours.

LACTESCENT. adj. [lactescens, Latin.] Producing Milk.
Amongst the pot-herbs are some lactescent plants, as lettuce and endive, which contain a wholesome juice. Arbutn.

LACTIFEROUS. adj. [lac and fero.] What conveys or brings milk.
He makes the breasts to be nothing but glandules, made up of an infinite number of little knots, each whereof hath its excretory vessel, or lactiferous duct. Ray on the Creation.

LAD. n. f. [leobe, Saxon, which commonly signifies people, but sometimes, says Mr. Lye, a boy.]
1. A boy; a stripling, in familiar language.
We were
Two lads, that thought there was no more behind,
But such a day to-morrow as to-day,
And to be boy eternal. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
The poor lad who wants knowledge, must set his invention on the rack, to say something where he knows nothing. Locke.
Too far from the ancient forms of teaching several good grammarians have departed, to the great detriment of such lads as have been removed to other schools. Watts.

2. A boy, in pastoral language.
For grief whereof the lad would after joy,
But pin'd away in anguish, and self-will'd annoy. Fa. Qu.
The shepherd lad,
Whose offspring on the throne of Judah sat
So many ages. Milton's Par. Reg. b. ii. l. 439.

LADDER. n. f. [ladder, Saxon.]
1. A frame made with steps placed between two upright pieces.
Whose compoft is rotten, and carried in time,
And spread as it should be, thrift's ladder may clime. Triff.
Now streets grow throng'd, and busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play,
And some more bold mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.
I saw a stage erected about a foot and a half from the ground, capable of holding four of the inhabitants with two or three ladders to mount it. Gulliver's Travels.

Easy

LAD

- Easy in words thy file, in sense sublime;
'Tis like the ladder in the patriarch's dream,
Its foot on earth, its height above the skies. Prior.
2. Any thing by which one climbs.
Then took the help to her of a servant near about her husband, whom she knew to be of a hasty ambition; and such a one, who wanting true sufficiency to raise him, would make a ladder of any mischief. Sidney, b. ii.

I must climb her window,
The ladder made of cords. Shakef. Two Gent. of Verona.
Northumberland, thou ladder, by the which My cousin Bolingbroke ascends my throne. Shakef.
Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shakef.

3. A gradual rise.
Endow'd with all these accomplishments, we leave him in the full career of success, mounting fast towards the top of the ladder ecclesiastical, which he hath a fair probability to reach. Swift.

LADDE. n. f.
Lade is the mouth of a river, and is derived from the Saxon lade, which signifies a purging or discharging; there being a discharge of the waters into the sea, or into some greater river. Gilson's Camden.

TO LADE, v. a. preter. and part. passive, laded or laden. [from plasan, Saxon.] It is now commonly written load.

1. To load; to freight; to burthen.
And they laded their asses with corn, and departed thence.
Gen. xlii. 26.
- The experiment which sheweth the weights of several bodies in comparison with water, is of use in lading of ships, and showing what burthen they will bear. Bacon's Pb. Rem.
The vessels, heavy laden, put to sea
With prosperous winds; a woman leads the way. Dryden.
Though the peripatetic doctrine does not satisfy, yet it is as easy to account for the difficulties he charges on it, as for those his own hypothesis is laden with. Locke.

2. [Lacan, to draw, Saxon.] To heave out; to throw out.
He chides the sea that sunders him from them,
Saying, he'll lade it dry to have his way. Shakef.
They never let blood; but say, if the pot boils too fast there is no need of lading out any of the water, but only of taking away the fire; and so they allay all heats of the blood by abstinence, and cooling herbs. Temple.

If there be springs in the slate marl, there must be help to lade or pump it out. Mortimer's Husband.

LADING. n. f. [from lade.] Weight; burthen.
Some we made prize, while others burnt and rent
With their rich lading to the bottom went. Waller.
The storm grows higher and higher, and threatens the utter loss of the ship; there is but one way to save it, which is, by throwing its rich lading overboard. South's Sermon.
It happened to be foul weather, so that the mariners cast their whole lading overboard to save themselves. L'Estrange.
Why should he sink where nothing seem'd to press?
His lading little, and his ballast less. Swift.

LADLE. n. f. [plazle, Saxon, from placan; laugh, Erse.]
1. A large spoon; a vessel with a long handle, used in throwing out any liquid.

Some stir'd the molten ore with ladles great. Fa. Qu.
When the materials of glass have been kept long in fusion, the mixture casts up the superfluous salt, which the workmen take off with ladles. Boyle.

A ladle for our silver dish. Prior.
Is what I want, is what I wish.
2. The receptacles of a mill wheel, into which the water falling turns it.

LADLE-FUL. n. f. [ladle and full.]
If a footman be going up with a dish of soup, let the cook with a ladle-ful dribble his livery all the way up stairs. Sw.

LADY. n. f. [læpɪz, Saxon.]
1. A woman of high rank: the title of lady properly belongs to the wives of knights, of all degrees above them, and to the daughters of earls, and all of higher ranks.

I am much afraid, my lady, his mother, play'd false with a smith. Shakespeare's Merch. of Verona.
I would thy husband were dead; I would make thee my lady.

—I your lady, Sir John? alas, I should be a pitiful lady. Shakef. Merry Wives of Windsor.
I am sorry my relation to so deserving a lady, should be any occasion of her danger and affliction. K. Charles.

2. An illustrious or eminent woman.
O foolish fairy's son, what fury mad
Hath thee incens'd to haste thy doleful fate?
Were it not better I that lady had,
Than that thou hadst repented it too late? Fairy Qu.
I love and hate her; for she's fair and royal,
And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite
Than lady ladies; winning from each one
The best she hath, and the of all compounded
Out-fells them all. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Before Homer's time this great lady was scarce heard of. Rol.

LAG

May every lady an Evadne prove,
That shall divert me from Afasia's love. Waller.
Should I thun the dangers of the war,
With scorn the Trojans would reward my pains,
And their proud ladies with their sweeping trains. Dryden.
We find on medals the representations of ladies, that have given occasion to whole volumes on the account only of a face. Addison on ancient Medals.

Of all these bounds, even from this line to this,
With shadowy forests, and with champaigns rich'd,
With plementous rivers, and wide-skirted meads,
We make thee lady. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. A word of complaisance used of women.
Say, good Cæsar,
That I some lady trifles have refer'd,
Immodest toys, things of such dignity
As we greet modern friends withal. Shakef. Ant. and Cl.
I hope I may speak of women without offence to the ladies. Guardian.

LADY-BEDSTRAW. n. f. [Gallium.] It is a plant of the hel-late kind; the leaves are neither rough nor knappy, and produced at the joints of the stalks, five or six in number, in a radiant form: the flower consists of one leaf, expanded toward the upper part, and divided into several segments; each of these flowers is succeeded by two dry seeds. Miller.

LADY-BIRD. } n. f. A small red insect vaginopennous.
LADY-COW. }
LADY-FLY. }

Fly lady-bird, north, south, or east or west,
Fly where the man is found that I love best. Gay's Poet.

This lady-fly I take from off the grass,
Whose spotted back might scarlet red surpass. Gay.

LADY-DAY. n. f. [lady and day.] The day on which the annunciation of the blessed virgin is celebrated.

LADY-LIKE. adj. [lady and like.] Soft; delicate; elegant.
Her tender constitution did declare,
Too lady-like a long fatigue to bear. Dry. Hind and Pamb.

LADY-MANTLE. n. f. [Alchimilla.] The leaves are serrated, the cup of the flower is divided into eight segments, expanded in form of a star; the flowers are collected into bunches upon the tops of the stalks; each seed vessel generally contains two seeds. Miller.

LADYSHIP. n. f. [from lady.] The title of a lady.
Madam, he sends you ladyship this ring. Shakespeare.

If they be nothing but mere flatemen,
Your ladyship shall observe their gravity,
And their reservedness, their many cautions, Fitting their persons. Benj. Johnson's Catiline.

I the wronged pen to please,
Make it my humble thanks express Unto your ladyship in these. Waller.

'Tis Galla; let her ladyship but peep. Dryden's Jew.
LADY-SLIPPER. n. f. [Calceolus.] It hath an anomalous flower, consisting of six dissimilar leaves, four of which are placed in form of a cross, the other two pass the middle, one of which is bifid, and rests on the other, which is swelling, and shaped like a shoe; the empalement becomes a fruit, open on three sides, to which adhere the valves, pregnant with very small seeds like dust. Miller.

LADY-SMOCK. n. f. [Cardamine.] The flower consists of four leaves succeeded by narrow pods, which when ripe roll up, and cast forth their seeds: the leaves for the most part are winged. The first sort is sometimes used in medicine; the third sort is a very beautiful plant, continuing a long time in flower: they are preserved in botanick gardens, and some of them merit a place in some shady part of every curious garden, for their odd manner of casting forth their seeds on the slightest touch when the pods are ripe. Miller.

When dazles pied, and violets blue,
And lady's-smocks all silver white,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shakespeare.

See here a boy gathering lilies and lady-smocks, and there a girl cropping culverkeys and cowslips, all to make gar-lands. Waller's Angler.

Lady's-smocks have small stringy roots that run in the ground, and comes up in divers places. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LAG. adj. [lænz, Saxon, long; lagg, Swedish, the end.]

In their wailing they shall take up a lamentation for thee, and lament over thee. Ezek. xxvii. 32.

Far less I now lament for one whole world
Of wicked sons destroyed, than I rejoice
For one man found to perfect and to just,
That God vouchsafes to raise another world
From him. Milton's Par. Lost, b. xi. l. 874.

To LAMENT. v. a. To bewail; to mourn; to bemoan; to sorrow for.

Come, now towards Chertsey with your holy load,
And still, as you are weary of this weight,
Rest you, while I lament king Henry's corse. Shakespeare.

The pair of fates praise;
One pity'd, one condemn'd the woful times,
One laugh'd at follies, one lamented crimes. Dryden.

LA'MENT. n. f. [lamentum, Latin, from the verb.]
1. Sorrow audibly expressed; lamentation; grief uttered in complaints or cries.
Long ere our approaching heard within Noise, other than the found of dance, or song!
Torment, and loud lament, and furious rage. Milton.

The loud laments arise, Dryden.
Of one distress'd, and muffled mingled cries.

2. Expression of sorrow.
To add to your laments,
Wherewith you now bedew king Henry's hearth,
I must inform you of a dismal fight. Shakespeare, Henry VI.

LA'MENTABLE. adj. [lamentabilis, Latin; lamentable, French, from lament.]
1. To be lamented; causing sorrow.
The lamentable change is from the best;
The worst returns to laughter. Shakespeare, King Lear.

2. Mournful; sorrowful; expressing sorrow.
A lamentable tune is the sweetest music to a woful mind.
The victors to their vessels bear the prize,
And hear behind loud groans, and lamentable cries. Dryden.

3. Miserable, in a ludicrous or low sense; pitiful; despicable.
This bishop, to make out the disparity between the heavens and them, flies to this lamentable refuge. Stillingfleet.

LA'MENTABLY. adv. [from lamentable.]
1. With expressions or tokens of sorrow; mournfully.
The matter in itself lamentable, lamentably expressed by the old prince, greatly moved the two princes to compassion. Sidney, b. ii.

2. So as to cause sorrow.
Our fortune on the sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

3. Pitifully; despicably.
LA'MENTATION. n. f. [lamentatio, Latin.] Expression of sorrow; audible grief.
Be't lawful that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shakespeare, R. III.

His sons buried him, and all Israel made great lamentation for him. 1 Mac. ii. 10.

LAMEN'TER. n. f. [from lament.] He who mourns or laments.
Such a complaint good company must pity, whether they think the lamenter ill or not. Spectator, No. 429.

LA'MENTINE. n. f. A fish called a sea-cow or manatee, which is near twenty feet long, the head resembling that of a cow, and two short feet, with which it creeps on the shallows and rocks to get food; but has no fins: the flesh is commonly eaten. Bailey.

LA'MINA. n. f. [Lat.] Thin plate; one coat laid over another.
LA'MINATED. adj. [from lamina.] Plated: used of such bodies whose contexture discovers such a disposition as that of plates lying over one another.
From the apposition of different coloured gravel arises, for the most part, the laminated appearance of a stone. Sharp.

To LAMM. v. a. To beat soundly with a cudgel. Diät.

LA'MMAS. n. f. [This word is said by Bailey, I know not on what authority, to be derived from a custom, by which the tenants of the archbishop of York were obliged, at the time of mass, on the first of August, to bring a lamb to the altar. In Scotland they are said to wean lambs on this day. It may else be corrupted from lattermath.] The first of August.

In 1578 was that famous lammas day, which buried the reputation of Don John of Austria. Bacon.

LAMP. n. f. [lampe, French; lampas, Latin.]
1. A light made with oil and a wick.
O thievish night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heaven, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.

To the mistle and lonely traveller?
In lamp furnaces I used spirit of wine instead of oil, and with the same flame has melted foliated gold. Boyle.

2. Any kind of light, in poetical language, real or metaphorical.
Thy gentle eyes send forth a quick'ning spirit,
And feed the dying lamp of life within me. Rowe.

LAN

Cynthia, fair regent of the night,
O may thy silver lamp from heaven's high bow,
Direct my footsteps in the midnight hour. Gay.

LA'MPASS. n. f. [lampas, French.] A lump of flesh, about the bigness of a nut, in the roof of a horse's mouth, which rises above the teeth. Farrier's Dict.

His horse posset with the glanders, troubled with the lampas, infected with the fashions. Shakespeare.

LA'MBLACK. n. f. [lamp and black.] It is made by holding a torch under the bottom of a bafon, and as it is furred strike it with a feather into some shell, and grind it with gum water. Peasbarn on Drawing.

LAM'PING. adj. [λαμπρύνω.] Shining; sparkling.
Happy lines, on which with starry light
Those lamping eyes will deign sometimes to look. Spenser.

LAMPOON. n. f. [Bailey derives it from lampoons, a drunken song. It imports, let us drink, from the old French lampier, and was repeated at the end of each couplet at carousals. Treu.] A personal satire; abuse; censure written not to reform but to vex.
They say my talent is satire; if so, it is a fruitful age: they have fown the dragon's teeth themselves, and it is but just they should reap each other in lampoons. Dryden.

Make satire a lampoon. Pope.

To LAMPOON. v. a. [from the noun.] To abuse with personal satire.
LA'MPOONER. n. f. [from lampoon.] A scribbler of personal satire.
We are naturally displeased with an unknown critic, as the ladies are with a lampooner, because we are bitten in the dark. Dryden's En.

The squibs are those who are called libellers, lampooners, and pamphleteers. Tatler, No. 88.

LA'MPREY. n. f. [lamprey, French; lamprey, Dutch.]
Many fish much like the eel frequent both the sea and fresh rivers; as, the lamprel, lamprey, and lamperne. Walton.

LA'MPRON. n. f. A kind of sea fish.
These rocks are frequented by lampoons, and greater fishes, that devour the bodies of the drowned. Notes on the Odyssey.

LANCE. n. f. [lance, French; lancea, Latin.] A long spear, which, in the heroic ages, seems to have been generally thrown from the hand, as by the Indians at this day. In later times the combatants thrust them against each other on horseback.
He carried his lances which were strong, to give a lancelly blow. Sidney.

Plate fin with gold,
And the strong lance of justice hurtles breaks:
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it. Shakespeare.

They shall hold the bow and the lance. Jer. l. 42.

To LANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To pierce; to cut.
In fell motion,
With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lance'd my arm. Shakespeare.

In their cruel worship they lance themselves with knives. Glanville's Scip. c. 16.

TH' infernal minister advanc'd,
Seiz'd the due victim, and with fury lance'd
Her back, and piercing through her inmost heart, Drew backward. Dryden's Theod. and Hongria.

2. To open chirurgically; to cut in order to a cure.
We do lance
Diseases in our bodies. Shakespeare, Ant. and Cleopatra.

Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more Than when it bites, but lanceth not the fore. Shakespeare.

That differs as far from our usual severities, as the lancing of a physician do from the wounds of an adversary. D. of Pi.

Lance the fore,
And cut the head; for till the core is found
The secret vice is fed. Dryden's Georg. l. 691.

The shepherd stands,
And when the lancing knife requires his hands,
Vain help, with idle prayers, from heav'n demands. Dryden.

LA'NCELY. adj. [from lance.] Suitable to a lance. Not in use.

He carried his lances, which were strong, to give a lancelly blow. Sidney, b. ii.

LANCEPESADE. n. f. [lance spezzate, French.] The officer under the corporal: not now in use among us.
To th' Indies of her arm he flies,
Fraught both with east and western prize,
Which, when he had in vain essay'd,
Arm'd like a dapper lancepedade. Cleveland.

With Spanish pike, he broach'd a pore.
LA'NCET. n. f. [lancetta, French.] A small pointed surgical instrument.
I gave vent to it by an apertion with a lancet, and discharged white matter.
It differeth from a vein, which in an apparent blue runneth along the body, and if dexterously pricked with a lancet, emitth a red drop. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii.

Hippocrates faith, blood-letting should be done with broad lancet.

LAN

lancets or swords, in order to make a large orifice: the manner of opening a vein then was by stabbing or pertusion, as in horses. Arbutnot on ancient Coins.

To LANCH. v. a. [lance, French.] This word is too often written launch: it is only a vocal corruption of lance. To dart; to cast as a lance; to throw; to let fly.
See whose arm can lanch the furer bolt,
And who's the better Jove. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread that interdicted shore:
When Jove tremendous in the fable deeps,
Launch'd his red lightning at our scatter'd ships. Pope.

LANCINATION. n. f. [from lancina, Latin.] Tearing; laceration.
To LANCINATE. v. a. [lancina, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to lacerate.

LAND. n. f. [lane, Gothick, Saxon, and so all the Teuto-nick dialects.]
1. A country; a region; distinct from other countries.
All the nations of Scythia, like a mountain flood, did overflow all Spain, and quite drowned and washed away whatsoever reliques there were left of the land-trod people. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

What had he done to make him fly the land? Shakespeare.

The chief men of the land had great authority; though the government was monarchical, it was not despotic. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Earth; distinct from water.
The princes delighting their conceits with confirming their knowledge, seeing wherein the sea-discipline differed from the land-service, they had pleasing entertainment. Sidney.

He to-night hath boarded a land-carack;
If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever. Shakespeare.

By land they found that huge and mighty country. Abbot.

With eleven thousand land-soldiers, and twenty-five ships of war, we within two months have won one town. Bacon.

Necessity makes men ingenious and hardy; and if they have but land-room or sea-room, they find supplies for their hunger. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Yet, if thou go'st by land, thy grief possess
My soul ev'n then, my fears would be the less:
But ah! be warn'd to shun the wat'ry way. Dryden.

They turn their heads to sea, their stems to land,
And greet with greedy joy th' Italian strand. Dryden.

I writ not always in the proper terms of navigation, or land-service. Dryden's Ensis.

The French are to pay the same duties at the dry ports through which they pass by land-carriage, as we pay upon importation or exportation by sea. Add. Freeholder.

The Phoenicians carried on a land-trade to Syria and Mesopotamia, and stop't not short, without pushing their trade to the Indies. Arbutnot on Coins.

The species brought by land-carriage were much better than those which came to Egypt by sea. Arbutnot.

3. Ground; surface of the place. Unusual.
Beneath his steele calque he felt the blow,
And roll'd, with limbs relax'd, along the land. Pope.

4. An estate real and immovable.
To forfeit all your goods, lands, and tenements,
Castles, and goods whatsoever, and to be Out of the king's protection. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

He kept himself within the bounds of loyalty, and enjoy'd certain lands and towns in the borders of Polonia. Knelles.

This man is freed from servile hands,
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall:
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
And having nothing, yet hath all. Wotton.

5. Nation; people.
These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dryden.

6. Urine. [plons, Saxon.] As Probably this was a coarse expression in the cant strain, formerly in common use, but since laid aside and forgotten, which meant the taking away a man's life. For land or lant is an old word for urine, and to stop the common passages and functions of nature is to kill. Hammer.

You are abused, and by some putter on,
That will be dam'd for't; would I knew the villain,
I would land-damn him. Shakespeare, Winter Tale.

To LAND. v. a. [from the noun.] To set on shore.
You shall hear
The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not fearing Britain. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

I told him of the army that was landed;
He laugh'd at it. Shakespeare's King Lear.

He who rules the raging wind,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind,
Thy committed pledge restore,
And land him safely on the shore. Dryden's Horace.

LAN

Another Typhis shall new seas explore,
Another Argo land the chiefs upon th' Iberian shore. Dryden.

To LAND. v. n. To come to shore.
Let him land, Shakespeare, Hen. V.

And solemnly see him set on to London.
Land ye not, none of you, and provide to be gone from this coast within sixteen days. Bacon's New Atlantis.

I land, with luckless omens; then adore
Their gods. Dryden's Ensis.

2. A game at cards.

LANTERN. n. f. [lanterne, French; laterna, Latin: it is by mistake often written lanthorn.] A transparent case for a candle.

God shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, my lanthorn to my feet. Shakef.

Thou art our admiral; thou bearest the lanthorn in the poop, but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the knight of the burning lamp. Shakef. Henry IV. p. i.

A candle lasted longer in a lanthorn than at large. Bacon.

Amongst the excellent acts of that king, one hath the pre-eminence, the erection and institution of a society, which we call Solomon's house; the noblest foundation that ever was, and the lanthorn of this kingdom. Bacon's Atlantis.

O thievish night,
Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller. Milton.

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand. Governor's Tong.

Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous eruptions of light, to prevent the art of the lantern-maker.

More's Divine Dialogues.

There are at Paris, Madrid, Lisbon, Rome, great hospitals, in the walls of which are placed machines in the shape of large lanthorns, with a little door in the side of them. Addison.

Our ideas succeed one another in our minds, not much unlike the images in the inside of a lanthorn, turned round by the heat of a candle. Locke.

2. A lighthouse; a light hung out to guide ships.

Caprea, where the lanthorn fix'd on high
Shines like a moon through the benighted Sky,
While by its beams the wary sailor steers. Addison.

LANTERN JAW. A term used of a thin visage, such as if a candle were burning in the mouth might transmit the light.

Being very lucky in a pair of long lanthorn-jaws, he wrung his face into a hideous grimace. Addison's Spectator, No. 173.

LANGUINOUS. adj. [languinosus, Latin.] Downy; covered with soft hair.

LAP. n. f. [leppe, Saxon; lappe, German.]

1. The loose part of a garment, which may be doubled at pleasure.

If a joint of meat falls on the ground, take it up gently, wipe it with the lap of your coat, and then put it into the dish. Swift's Directions to a Footman.

2. The part of the cloths that is spread horizontally over the knees as one sits down, so as any thing may lie in it.

It feeds each living plant with liquid lap,
And fills with flowers fair Flora's painted lap. Spenser.

Upon a day, as love lay sweetly slumb'ring
All in his mothers lap,
A gentle bee, with his loud trumpet murr'ring,
About him flew by hap. Spenser.

I'll make my haven in a lady's lap,
And 'twich sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakef.

She bids you
All on the wanton rushes lay you down,
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you. Shakef.

LAP

Let us rear
The higher our opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er-lust-wearied Antony. Shakef. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Heav'n's almighty fire
Melts on the bosom of his love, and pours
Himself into her lap in fruitful show'rs. Crashaw.

Men expect that religion should cost them no pains, and that happiness should drop into their laps. Tillotson.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;
Then, helpless, in his mother's lap is laid.
He creeps, he walks, and issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began;
Retchless of laws, affects to rule alone,
Anxious to reign, and restless on the throne. Dryden.

To LAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wrap or twist round any thing.

He hath a long tail, which, as he descends from a tree, he laps round about the boughs, to keep himself from falling. Grew's Museum.

2. To involve in any thing.

As through the flow'ring forest rash the fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. Spenser.

The thane of Cawder 'gan a dismal conflict,
Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him. Shakef.peare's Macbeth.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me,
Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself,
All thin and naked, to the numb cold night. Shakef.peare.

Ever against eating cares, Milton.

Lap me in soft Lydian airs,
Indulgent fortune does her care employ,
And smiling, broods upon the naked boy;
Her garment spreads, and laps him in the folds,
And covers with her wings from nightly colds. Dryden.

Here was the repository of all the wife contentions for power between the nobles and commons, lapt up safely in the bosom of a Nero and a Caligula. Swift.

To LAP. v. n. To be spread or twisted over any thing.

The upper wings are opacus; at their hinder ends, where they lap over, transparent, like the wing of a fly. Grew.

To LAP. v. n. [lappian, Saxon; lappen, Dutch.] To feed by quick reciprocations of the tongue.

The dogs by the river Nilus' side being thirsty, lap hastily as they run along the shore. Digby on bodies.

They had soups served up in broad dishes, and so the fox fell to lapping himself, and bade his guest heartily welcome. L'Estrange, Fab. 31.

The tongue serves not only for tasting, but for mastication and deglutition, in man, by licking; in the dog and cat kind, by lapping. Ray on Creation.

To LAP. v. a. To lick up.

For all the rest
They'll take suggestion, as a cat laps milk. Shakef.peare.

Upon a bull
Two horrid Lyons rampt, and scis'd, and tugg'd off, bel-lowing still,
Both men and dogs came; yet they tore the hide, and lapt their fill. Chapman's Iliad, b. xviii.

LAPDOG. n. f. [lap and dog.] A little dog, fondled by ladies in the lap.

One of them made his court to the lap-dog, to improve his interest with the lady. Collier.

These if the laws did that exchange afford,
Would save their lap-dog sooner than their lord. Dryden.

Lap-dogs give themselves the rowling shake,
And sleepless lovers just at twelve awake. Pope.

LAPFUL. n. f. [lap and full.] As much as can be contained in the lap.

One found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild goards his lapful, and shred them into the pot of pottage. 2 Kings.

Will four per cent. increase the number of lenders? if it will not, then all the plenty of money these conjurers bestow upon us, is but like the gold and silver which old women believe other conjurers bestow by whole lapfuls on poor credulous girls. Locke.

LAPICIDE. n. f. [lapicida, Latin.] A stonecutter. Diët.

LAPIDARY. n. f. [lapidaire, Fr.] One who deals in stones or gems.

As a cock was turning up a dunghill, he espied a diamond: well (says he) this sparkling foolery now to a lapidary would have been the making of him; but, as to any use of mine, a barley-corn had been worth forty on't. L'Estrange.

Of all the many sorts of the gem kind reckoned up by the lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

LAP

To LAPIDATE. v. a. [lapido, Latin.] To stone; to kill by stoning. Diſt.
LAPIDATION. n. f. [lapidatio, Lat. lapidation, Fr.] A stoning.
LAPIDEOUS. adj. [lapideus, Latin.] Stony; of the nature of stone.

There might fall down into the lapideous matter, before it was concreted into a stone, some small toad, which might remain there imprisoned, till the matter about it were condensed. Ray on Creation.

LAPIDESCENT. n. f. [lapidesco, Latin.] Stony concretion.

Of lapis ceratites, or cornu fossilis, in subterraneous cavities, there are many to be found in Germany, which are but the lapidescenties, and putrefactive mutations, of hard bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iii. c. 22.

LAPIDESCENT. adj. [lapidescent, Latin.] Growing or turning to stone.

LAPIDIFICATION. [lapidification, French.] The act of forming stones.

Induration or lapidification of substances more soft, is another degree of condensation. Bacon's Natural History.

LAPIDIFICK. adj. [lapidifique, French.] Forming stones.

The atoms of the lapidifick, as well as saline principle, being regular, do concur in producing regular stones. Grew.

LAPIDIST. n. f. [from lapides, Latin.] A dealer in stones or gems.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, being exalted to that degree, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factitious stones of chemists in imitation being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray on Creation.

LAPIS. n. f. [Latin.] A stone.

LAPIS LAZULI.

The lapis lazuli, or azure stone, is a copper ore, very compact and hard, so as to take a high polish, and is worked into a great variety of toys. It is found in detached lumps, usually of the size of a man's fist, of an elegant blue colour, beautifully variegated with clouds of white, and veins of a shining gold colour: that of Asia and Africa is much superior to the Bohemian or German kind: it has been used in medicine, but the present practice takes no notice of it: to it the painters are indebted for their beautiful ultra-marine colour, which is only a calcination of lapis lazuli. Hill.

LAPPER. n. f. [from lap.]

1. One who wraps up.

They may be lappers of linen, and bailiffs of the manor. Swift's Consideration on Two Bills.

2. One who laps or licks.

LAPPET. n. f. [diminutive of lap.] The parts of a head dress that hang loose.

How naturally do you apply your hands to each other's lappets, and ruffles, and mantuas. Swift.

LAPSE. n. f. [lapsus, Latin.]

1. Flow; fall; glide.

Round I saw
Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,
And liquid laps of murm'ring streams. Milton.

Notions of the mind are preserved in the memory, notwithstanding lapse of time. Hale's Original of Mankind.

2. Petty error; small mistake.

These are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. vi. c. 13.

The weakness of human understanding all will confess; yet the confidence of most practically disowns it; and it is easier to persuade them of it from others lapses than their own. Glanville's Secp. c. 9.

This scripture may be usefully applied as a caution to guard against those lapses and failings, to which our infirmities daily expose us. Rogers's Sermon.

It hath been my constant business to examine whether I could find the smallest lapse in file or propriety through my whole collection, that I might send it abroad as the most finished piece. Swift.

3. Translation of right from one to another.

In a presentation to a vacant church, a layman ought to present within four months, and a clergyman within six, otherwise a devolution, or lapse of right, happens. Ayliffe.

To LAPSE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To glide slowly; to fall by degrees.

This disposition to shorten our words, by retrenching the vowels, is nothing else but a tendency to lapse into the barbarity of those northern nations from whom we are descended, and whose languages labour all under the same defect. Swift's Letter to the Lord Treasurer.

2. To fall in any thing; to slip.

I have ever narrified my friends,
Of whom he's chief, with all the fize that verity
Would without lapsing suffer. Shakeſp. Coriolanus.

To lapse in fulness

Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakeſp. Cymbeline.

3. To slip by inadvertency or mistake.

Homer, in his characters of Vulcan and Thersites, has lapsed into the burlesque character, and departed from that serious air essential to an epick poem. Add. Spectator.

LAR

Let there be no wilful perversion of another's meaning; no sudden seizure of a lapped syllable to play upon it. Watts.

3. To lose the proper time.

For which if I be lapped in this place,
I shall pay dear. Shakeſp. Twelfth Night.

As an appeal may be deferred by the appellant's lapsing the term of law, so it may also be deferred by a lapse of the term of a judge. Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. To fall by the negligence of one proprietor to another.

If the archbishop shall not fill it up within six months ensuing, it lapses to the king. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To fall from perfection, truth or faith.

Once more I will renew
His lapsed pow'rs, though forfeit, and intrall'd.

By fin to foul exorbitant desires. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Indeed the charge seems designed as an artifice of diversion, a sprout of that fig-tree which was to hide the nakedness of lapsed Adam. Decay of Piety.

All publick forms suppose it the most principal, universal, and daily requisite to the lapsing state of human corruption. Decay of Piety.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great festivities of penance were prescribed them, as appears by the canons of Ancyra. Stillingfleet's Disc. on Romish Idolatry.

LAPWING. n. f. [lap and wing.] A clamorous bird with long wings.

Ah! but I think him better than I say,
And yet would herein others eyes were worse;
Far from her nest the lapsing cries away;
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse. Shak.

And how in fields the lapsing Tereus reigns,
The warbling nightingale in woods complains. Dryden.

LAPWORK. n. f. [lap and work.] Work in which one part is interchangeably wrapped over the other.

A basket made of porcupine quills: the ground is a pack-thread caul woven, into which, by the Indian women, are wrought, by a kind of lap-work, the quills of porcupines, not split, but of the young ones intire; mixed with white and black in even and indented waves. Grew's Museum.

LARBOARD. n. f.

The left-hand side of a ship, when you stand with your face to the head. Harris.

Or when Ulysses on the larboard thunn'd
Charybdis, and by the other whirlpool steer'd. Milton.

Tack to the larboard, and stand off to sea,

Veer starboard sea and land. Dryden.

LARCENY. n. f. [larcin, Fr. latrocinium, Lat.] Petty theft.

Those laws would be very unjust, that should chalkize murder and petty larceny with the same punishment. Spectat.

LARCH. n. f. [Larix.]

The leaves, which are long and narrow, are produced out of little tubercles, in form of a painter's pencil, as in the cedar of Libanus, but fall off in winter; the cones are small and oblong, and, for the most part, have a small branch growing out of the top; these are produced at remote distances from the male flowers, on the same tree: the male flowers are, for the most part, produced on the under side of the branches, and, at their first appearance, are very like small cones. Mills.

Some botanical critics tell us, the poets have not rightly followed the traditions of antiquity, in metamorphosing the sisters of Phaeton into poplars, who ought to have been turned into larch trees; for that it is this kind of tree which sheds a gum, and is commonly found on the banks of the Po. Addison on Italy.

LARD. n. f. [lardum, Latin; lard, French.]

1. The grease of swine.

So may thy pastures with their flow'ry feasts,
As suddenly as lard, fat thy lean beasts. Donne.

2. Bacon; the flesh of swine.

By this the boiling kettle had prepar'd,
And to the table sent the smocking lard;
On which with eager appetite they dine,
A sav'ry bit, that serv'd to relish wine. Dryden's Ovid.

The sacrifice they sped;
Chopp'd off their nervous thighs, and next prepar'd
To involve the lean in cauls, and mend with lard. Dryden.

To LARD. v. a. [larder, French; from the noun.]

1. To stuff with bacon.

The larded thighs on loaded altars laid. Dryd. Homer.

No man lards salt pork with orange peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitch-cock eel. King.

2. To fatten.

Now Falstaff sweats to death,
And lards the lean earth as he walks along. Shakeſp.

Brave soldier, doth he lie

Larding the plain. Shakeſp. Henry V.

To mix with something else by way of improvement.

I found, Horatio,

A royal knavery; an exact command,

Larded with many several sorts of reasons. Shakeſp. Hamlet.

Let

LAR

Let no alien interpose

To lord with wit thy hungry Epſom prose. Dryden.

He lords with flourish his long harangues;

'Tis fine, sayst thou. Dryd.

Swearing by heaven; the poets think this nothing, their plays are so much larded with it. Collier's View of the Stage.

LARDER. n. f. [lardier, old French; from lard.] The room where meat is kept or salted.

This similitude is not borrowed of the larder house, but out of the school house. Ayliffe's Schoolmaster.

Flesh is ill kept in a room that is not cool; whereas in a cool and wet larder it will keep longer. Bacon.

So have I seen in larder dark,

Of veal a lucid loin. Dorset.

Old age,

More so, perverse in humour, diffident

The more he fills abouts, the less content:

His larder and his kitchen too observes,

And now, left he should want hereafter, starves. King.

LARDERER. [larder.] One who has the charge of the larder.

LARDON. n. f. [French.] A bit of bacon.

LARGE. adj. [large, French; largus, Latin.]

1. Big; bulky.

Charles II. asked me, What could be the reason, that in mountainous countries the men were commonly larger, and yet the cattle of all sorts smaller. Temple.

Great Theron fell,

Great Theron, large of limbs, of giant height. Dryden.

Warwick, Leicester, and Buckingham, bear a large boned sheep of the best shape and deepest staple. Mortimer's Husb.

2. Wide; extensive.

Their former large peopling was an effect of the countries impoverishing. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Let them dwell in the land, and trade therein; for it is large enough for them. Gen. xxiv. 21.

There he conquered a thousand miles wide and large.

3. Liberal; abundant; plentiful.

Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large. Ezek.

Vernal fumes and showers

Diffuse their warmth, large influence. Thomson's Autumn.

4. Copious; diffuse.

Skippon gave a large testimony under his hand, that they had carried themselves with great civility. Clarendon, b. viii.

I might be very large upon the importance and advantages of education, and say a great many things which have been said before. Felton on the Classics.

5. At LARGE. Without restraint.

If you divide a cane into two, and one speak at the one end, and you lay your ear at the other, it will carry the voice farther than in the air at large. Bacon's Nat. History.

Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms

Reduce'd their shapes immense; and were at large,

Though without number still. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The children are bred up in their father's way; or so plentifully provided for, that they are left at large. Sprat.

Your zeal becomes importunate;

I've hitherto permitted it to rave

And talk at large; but learn to keep it in,

Left it should take more freedom than I'll give it. Addif.

6. At LARGE. Diffusely.

Discover more at large what cause that was,
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess. Shakeſp. Henry VI.

It does not belong to this place to have that point debated at large. Watts.

LARGELY. adv. [from large.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; diffusely.

Where the author treats more largely, it will explain the shorter hints and brief intimations. Watts's Imp. on the Mind.

3. Liberally; bounteously.

How he lives and eats:

How largely gives; how splendidly he treats. Dryden.

Those, who in warmer climes complain,
From Phœbus' rays they suffer pain,
Must own, that pain is largely paid
By generous wines beneath the shade. Swift.

4. Abundantly.

They their fill of love, and love's disport
Took largely; of their mutual guilt the seal. Milton.

LARGENESS. n. f. [from large.]

1. Bigness; bulk.

London excels any other city in the whole world, either in largeness, or number of inhabitants. Sprat's Sermons.

Nor must Bumastus, his old honours lose,

In length and largeness like the dugs of cows. Dryden.

2. Greatness; elevation.

There will be occasion for largeness of mind and agreeableness of temper. Collier of Friendship.

3. Extension; amplitude.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker, b. v. f. 27.

LAS

The ample proposition that hope makes

In all designs begun on earth below,

Falls in the promised largeness. Shakeſp. Troil. and Cres.

Knowing best the largeness of my own heart toward my people's good and just contentment. King Charles.

Shall grief contract the largeness of that heart,

In which nor fear nor anger has a part? Waller.

Man as far transcends the beasts in largeness of desire, as dignity of nature and employment. Glanville's Apology.

If the largeness of a man's heart carry him beyond prudence, we may reckon it illustrious weakness. L'Eſtrange.

4. Wideness.

Supposing that the multitude and largeness of rivers ought to continue as great as now; we can easily prove, that the extent of the ocean could be no less. Bentley's Sermons.

LARGESS. n. f. [largesse, Fr.] A present; a gift; a bounty.

Our coffers with too great a court,

And liberal largess, are grown somewhat light. Shakeſp.

He left me; having assigned a value of about two thousand ducats, for a bounty to me and my fellows: for they give great largesses where they come. Bacon's New Atlantis.

A pardon to the captain, and a largess

Among the soldiers, had appeas'd their fury. Denham.

The paltry largess too severely watch'd,

That no intruding guests usurp a share. Dryden's Juu.

I am enamour'd of Irus, whose condition will not admit of such largesses. Addison's Spectator.

LARGITION. n. f. [largitio, Lat.] The act of giving. Diſt.

LARK. n. f. [lapece, Saxon; lerk, Danish; lavrack, Scottish.] A small singing bird.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shakeſp.

Look up a height, the thrill-gorg'd lark so far

Cannot be seen or heard. Shakeſp. King Lear.

Th' example of the heav'nly lark,

Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark. Cowley.

Mark how the lark and linnet sing;

With rival notes

They strain their warbling throats,

To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

LARKER. n. f. [from lark.] A catcher of larks. Diſt.

LARKSPUR. n. f.

Its flower consists of many dissimilar petals, with the uppermost contracted, which ends in a tail, and receives another bird petal, which also ends in a tail; in the middle rises a pointal, which becomes a fruit of many pods collected into a head, and filled with seeds generally angular. Miller.

LARVATED. adj. [larvatus, Latin.] Masked. Diſt.

LARUM. n. f. [from alarum or alarm.]

1. Alarm; noise noting danger.

Utterers of secrets he from thence debar'd,
His larum bell might loud and wide be heard,
When cause requir'd, but never out of time,
Early and late it rung, at evening and at prime. Fa. Qu.

The peaking cornute her husband dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes to me in the instant of our encounter. Shakeſp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

How far off lie these armies?

—Within a mile and half.

—Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours. Shakeſp.

She is become formidable to all her neighbours, as she puts every one to stand upon his guard, and have a continual larum bell in his ears. Howell's Vocal Forest.

2. An instrument that makes a noise at a certain hour.

Of this nature was that larum, which, though it were but three inches big, yet would both wake a man, and of itself light a candle for him at any set hour. Wilkins.

I see men as lusty and strong that eat but two meals a day, as others that have set their stomachs, like larums, to call on them for four or five. Locke on Education.

The young Æneas all at once let down,

Stunn'd with his giddy larum half the town. Dunciad.

L A S

2. Wanton; soft; luxurious.
Grim viſaged war hath ſooth'd his wrinkl'd front;
And now, inſtead of mounting barbed ſteeds,
To fright the ſouls of fearful adverſaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the laſcivious pleaſing of a lute. Shakeſp. Rich. III.
LASCIVIOUSNESS. n. f. [from laſcivious.] Wantonneſs; looſeneſs.
The reaſon pretended by Auguſtus was the laſciviousneſs of his elegies, and his art of love. Dryd. Preface to Ovid.
LASCIVIOUSLY. adv. [from laſcivious.] Leudly; wantonly;
looſely.
LASH. n. f. [The moſt probable etymology of this word ſeems to be that of ſkinner, from ſchlagen, Dutch, to ſtrike;
whence laſh and laſh.]
1. A ſtroke with any thing pliant and tough.
From hence are heard the groans of ghoſts, the pains
Of ſounding laſhes, and of dragging chains. Dryden's Æn.
Rous'd by the laſh of his own ſtubborn tail,
Our lion now will foreign foes aſſail. Dryden.
2. The thong or point of the whip which gives the cut or blow.
Her whip of cricketer's bone, her laſh of ſkin,
Her waggoner a ſmall grey-coated gnat. Shakeſp.
I obſerved that your whip wanted a laſh to it. Addiſ. Spect.

To laugh at follies, or to laſh at vice. Dryden's Perſus.
Wheels claſh with wheels, and bar the narrow ſtreet;
The laſhing whip rebounds. Gay's Trivia.
LASH. n. f. [from laſh.] One that whips or laſhes.
LASS. n. f. [from lad is formed ladeſſe, by contraction laſſe.
Hickes.] A girl; a maid; a young woman: uſed now only of mean girls.
Now was the time for vigorous lads to ſhow
What love or honour could invite them to;
A goodly theatre, where rocks are round
With reverend age, and lovely laſſes crown'd. Waller.
A girl was worth forty of our widows; and an honeſt, downright, plain-dealing laſſe it was. L'Eſtrange.
They ſometimes an honeſt kiſs
Steal from unwary laſſes; they with ſcorn,
And neck reclin'd, relent. Philips.
LAſſITUDE. n. f. [laſſitude, Latin; laſſitude, French.] Weari-neſs; fatigue.
Laſſitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water; for all laſſitude is a kind of contuſion and compreſſion of the parts; and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolliſion. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.
Affiduity in cogitation is more than our embodied ſouls can bear without laſſitude or diſtemper. Glanville, Sep. 14.
She lives and breeds in the air; for the largeneſs and lightneſs of her wings and tail ſuſtain her without laſſitude.
More's Antidote againſt Atheiſm.
Do not over-fatigue the ſpirits, leſt the mind be ſeized

L A S

with a laſſitude, and thereby be tempted to nauſeate, and grow tired. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
From mouth and noſe the briny torrent ran,
And loſt in laſſitude lay all the man. Pope's Odyſſey.
Laſſitude generally expreſſes that wearineſs which proceeds from a diſtemper'd ſtate; and not from exerciſe, which wants no remedy but reſt: it proceeds from an increaſe of bulk, from a diminution of proper evacuation; or from too great a conſumption of the fluid neceſſary to maintain the ſpring of the ſolids, as in fevers; or from a vitiated ſecre-tion of that juice; whereby the fibres are not ſupplied. Quincy.
LAſſLORN. n. f. [laſſe and lorn.] Forſaken by his miſtreſs.
Brown groves,
Whoſe ſhadow the diſmiſſed batchelor loves,
Being laſſlorn. Shakeſp.
LAST. n. f. [laſter, Saxon; laſteſte, Dutch.]
1. Lateſt; that which follows all the reſt in time.
I feel my end approach, and thus embrac'd,
Am pleas'd to die; but hear me ſpeak my laſt. Dryden.
Here, laſt of Britons, let your names be read;
Are none, none living? let me praife the dead. Pope.
Wit not alone has ſhone on ages paſt,
But lights the preſent, and ſhall warm the laſt. Pope.
2. Hindmoſt; which follows in order of place.
3. Beyond which there is no more.
Unhappy ſlave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy to the laſt the kind releaſing knell. Cowley.
The ſwans, that on Cayſter often try'd
Their tuneful ſongs, now ſung their laſt, and dy'd. Addiſ.
O! may ſam'd Brunſwick be the laſt,
The laſt, the happieſt Britiſh king,
Whom thou ſhalt paint, or I ſhall ſing. Addiſon.
But, while I take my laſt adieu,
Heave thou no ſigh, nor ſhed a tear.
4. Next before the preſent, as laſt week.
5. Utmoſt.
Fools ambitiouſly contend
For wit and pow'r; their laſt endeavours bend
To outſhine each other. Dryden's Lucretius.
6. At LAST. In concluſion; at the end.
Gad, a troop ſhall overcome him: but he ſhall overcome at the laſt. Gen. xlix. 19.
Thus weather-cocks, that for a while
Have turn'd about with ev'ry blaſt,
Grown old, and deſtitute of oil,
Ruſt to a point, and fix at laſt. Freind.
7. The LAST; the end.
All politicians chew on wiſdom paſt,
And blunder on in buſineſs to the laſt. Pope.
LAST. adv.
1. The laſt time; the time next before the preſent.
How long is't now ſince laſt, yourſelf and I
Were in a maſk. Shakeſp.
When laſt I dy'd, and, dear! I die
As often as from thee I go,
I can remember yet that I
Something did ſay, and ſomething did beſtow. Donne.
2. In concluſion.
Pleaſ'd with his idol, he commends, admires,
Adores; and laſt, the thing ador'd deſires. Dryden.
To LAST. v. n. [laſtan, Saxon.] To endure; to continue;
to perſevere.
All more laſting than beautiful. Sidney.
I thought it agreeable to my affection to your grace, to prefix your name before the eſſays: for the Latin volume of them, being in the univerſal language, may laſt as long as books laſt. Bacon's Eſſays.
With ſeveral degrees of laſting, ideas are imprinted on the memory.
Theſe are ſtanding marks of facts delivered by thoſe who were eye-witneſſes to them, and which were contrived with great wiſdom to laſt till time ſhould be no more. Addiſon.
LAST. n. f. [laſt, Saxon.]
1. The mould on which ſhoes are formed.
The cobbler is not to go beyond his laſt. L'Eſtrange's Fab.
A cobbler produced ſeveral new grins, having been uſed to cut faces over his laſt. Addiſon's Spectator, N^o. 174.
Should the big laſt extend the ſhoe too wide,
Each ſtone would wrench th' unwary ſtep aſide. Gay.
2. [LAST, German.] A load; a certain weight or meaſure.
LAſTERY. n. f. A red colour.
The baſhful blood her ſnowy cheeks did ſpread,
That her became a poliſh'd ivory.

With fair vermilion, or pure laſtery. Spens. Fairy Queen.
LAſTAGE. n. f. [laſtage, French; laſtagie, Dutch; playe, Saxon, a load.]
1. Cuſtom paid for freightage.
2. The ballaſt of a ſhip.
LAſTING. participle adj. [from laſt.]
1. Continuing; durable. Every

L A T

Every violence offered weakens and impairs, and renders the body leſs durable and laſting. Ray on Creation.
2. Of long continuance; perpetual.
White parents may have black children, as negroes ſometimes have laſting white ones. Boyle on Colours.
The grateful work is done,
The ſeeds of diſcord ſow'd, the war begun:
Frauds, fears and fury, have poſſeſs'd the ſtate;
And fix'd the cauſes of a laſting hate. Dryden's Æn.
A ſinew crack'd ſeldom recovers its former ſtrength, and the memory of it leaves a laſting caution in the man, not to put the paſt quickly again to any robuſt employment. Locke.
LAſTINGLY. adv. [from laſting.] Perpetually.
LAſTINGNESS. n. f. [from laſting.] Durableneſs; continuance.
All more laſting than beautiful, but that the conſideration of the exceeding laſtingneſs made the eye believe it was exceeding beautiful. Sidney.
Conſider the laſtingneſs of the motions excited in the bottom of the eye by light. Newton's Opticks.
LAſTLY. adv. [from laſt.]
1. In the laſt place.
I will juſtify the quarrel; ſecondly, balance the forces; and, laſtly, propound variety of deſigns for choice, but not advise the choice. Bacon's War with Spain.
2. In the concluſion; at laſt.
LATCH. n. f. [laſſe, Dutch; laccio, Italian.] A catch of a door moved by a ſtring, or a handle.
The latch mov'd up. Gay's Paſtorals.
Then comes roſy health from her cottage of thatch,
Where never phyſician had liſted the latch. Smart.
To LATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To faſten with a latch.
He had ſtrength to reach his father's houſe: the door was only latched; and, when he had the latch in his hand, he turned about his head to ſee his purſuer. Locke.
2. To faſten; to cloſe, perhaps in this place: unleſs it rather ſignifies to waſh from lather.
But haſt thou yet lath'd the Athenian's eyes
With the love juice, as I did bid thee do? Shakeſp.
LAſTCHES. n. f.
Latches or laſkets, in a ſhip, are ſmall lines like loops, faſten-ed by ſewing into the bonnets and drablers of a ſhip, in order to lace the bonnets to the courſes, or the drablers to the bonnets. Harris.
LAſTCHET. n. f. [laſſet, Fr.] The ſtring that faſtens the ſhoe.
There cometh one mightier than I, the lathet of whole ſhoes I am not worthy to unlathet. Mark i. 7.
LATE. adj. [laſt, Saxon; laet, Dutch.]

O boy! thy father gave thee life too ſoon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late. Shakeſp. H. VI.
Second Silvius after theſe appears,
Silvius Æneas, for thy name he bears;
For arms and juſtice equally renown'd,
Who late reſtor'd in Alba ſhall be crown'd. Dryd. Æn.
He laughs at all the giddy turns of ſtate,
When mortals ſearch too ſoon, and fear too late. Dryden.
The later it is before any one comes to have theſe ideas, the later alſo will it be before he comes to thoſe maxims. Locke.
I might have ſpar'd his life,
But now it is too late. Philips's Diſtreſt Mother.
To make roſes, or other flowers, come late, is an experiment of pleaſure; for the antients eſteem'd much of the roſa ſera. Bacon's Natural Hiſtory.
There be ſome flowers which come more early, and others which come more late, in the year. Bacon's Nat. Hiſt.
3. Lateſt; not long ago.

2. [In poetry.] To appear gay, favourable, pleasant, or fertile.
Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You use her well; the world may laugh again,
And I may live to do you kindness, if You do it her. Shakespeare's Henry VI. p. i.
Then laughs the childish year with flowrets crown'd. Dry.
The plenteous board, high-heap'd with cates divine,
And o'er the foaming bowl the laughing wine. Pope.
3. TO LAUGH at. To treat with contempt; to ridicule.
Presently prepare thy grave;
Lie where the light foam of the sea may beat
Thy grave-stone daily; make thine epitaph,
That death in me at others lives may laugh. Shakespeare.
'Twere better for you, if 'twere not known in council;
you'll be laugh'd at. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
The dissolute and abandoned, before they are aware of it, are often betrayed to laugh at themselves, and upon reflection find, that they are merry at their own expence. Addison's Freeholder, N. 45.
No wit to flatter left of all his store;
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more. Pope.

TO LAUGH. v. a. To deride; to scorn.
Be bloody, bold and resolute; laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
A wicked soul shall make him to be laugh'd to scorn of his enemies. Ecclesi. vi. 4.

LAUGH. n. f. [from the verb.] The convulsion caused by merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.
Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh, to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope's Spring.

LAUGHABLE. adj. [from laugh.] Such as may properly excite laughter.
Nature hath fram'd strange fellows in her time:

L A U

Some that will evermore peep through their eye,
And laugh like parrots at a bagpiper;
And others of such vinegar aspect,
That they'll not show their teeth in way of smile,
Though Nestor swear the jest be laughable. Shakespeare.
Calaubon confesses his author Perlius was not good at turning things into a pleasant ridicule; or, in other words, that he was not a laughable writer. Dryden's Juvenal.

LA'UGHER. n. f. [from laugh.] A man fond of merriment.
I am a common laugher. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

LA'UGHTER. n. f. [from laugh.] Convulsive merriment; an inarticulate expression of sudden merriment.
To be worst,
The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,
Stands still in esperance; lives not in fear.
The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returns to laughter. Shakespeare's King Lear.
The act of laughter, which is a sweet contraction of the muscles of the face, and a pleasant agitation of the vocal organs, is not merely voluntary, or totally within the jurisdiction of ourselves. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. vii.

We find not that the laughter loving dame Mourn'd for Anchises. Waller.
Pain or pleasure, grief or laughter. Prior.

LA'VISH. adj. [Of this word I have been able to find no satisfactory etymology.]

1. Prodigal; wasteful; indiscreetly liberal.
His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles, in his own defence. Dryd.
The dame has been too lavish of her feast,
And fed him till he loaths. Rowe's Jane Shore.
2. Scattered in waste; profuse.
3. Wild; unrestrained.
Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof,
Confronted him, Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Curbing his lavish spirit. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO LAVISH. v. a. [from the adjective.] To scatter with profusion.
Should we thus lead them to a field of slaughter,
Might not th' impartial world with reason say,
We lavish'd at our deaths the blood of thousands. Addis.

LA'VISH. n. f. [from lavish.] A prodigal; a profuse man.

LA'VISHLY. adv. [from lavish.] Profusely; prodigally.

Wrested his meaning and authority. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Then laughs the childish year with flowrets crown'd,
And lavishly perfumes the fields around. Dryden.
Praise to a wit is like rain to a tender flower; if it be moderately bestowed, it cheers and revives; but if too lavishly, overcharges and depresses him. Pope.

LA'VISHMENT. n. f. [from lavish.] Prodigality; profusion.

LA'VISHNESS. n. f. [from lavish.] Prodigality; profusion.
First got with guile, and then preserv'd with dread,
And after spent with pride and lavishness. Fairy Queen.

TO LAUNCH. v. n. [It is derived by Skinner from lance, because a ship is pushed into water with great force.]

1. To force into the sea.
Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught. Luke v. 4.
So short a stay prevails;
He soon equips the ship, supplies the sails,
And gives the word to launch. Dryden.
For general history, Raleigh and Howel are to be had. He who would launch farther into the ocean, may consult Whear. Locke.
2. To rove at large; to expatiate.
From hence that gen'ral care and study springs,
That launching and progression of the mind.
Whoever pursues his own thoughts, will find them launch out beyond the extent of body into the infinity of space. Locke.
In our language Spenser has not contented himself with this submissive manner of imitation: he launches out into very flow'ry paths, which still conduct him into one great road. Prior's Preface to Solomon.
He had not acted in the character of a suppliant, if he had launched out into a long oration. Brome's Odyssey.
I have launched out of my subject on this article. Arbuth.

LAW

TO LANCH. v. a.
 1. To p. sh. to sea.
 All art is used to sink episcopacy, and launch presbytery, in England.
 With stays and cordage last he rigg'd the ship,
 And roll'd on leavers, launch'd her in the deep. Pope.
 2. To dart from the hand. This perhaps, for distinction sake, might better be written lanch.
 The King of Heav'n, obscure on high,
 Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
 His written bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
 Down to the deep abyss the flaming fellow strook. Dryd.
LAUND. n. f. [lande, French; lawn, Welsh.] Lawn a plain extended between woods. Hammer.
 Under this thick-grown brake we'll shroud ourselves,
 For through this lawn anon the deer will come;
 And in this covert will we make our stand,
 Culling the principal of all the deer. Shakesp. Henry VI.
LAUNDRESS. n. f. [lavandiere, French.] Skinner imagines that lavandresse may have been the old word.] A woman whose employment is to wash cloaths.
 The countess of Richmond would often say, On condition the princes of Christendom would march against the Turks, she would willingly attend them, and be their laundress. Camden.
 Take up these cloaths here quickly; carry them to the laundress in Datchet mead. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 The laundress must be sure to tear her smocks in the washing, and yet wash them but half. Swift.

 The lawless tyrant, who denies
 To know their God, or message to regard,
 Must be compell'd. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xii.
 Orpheus did not, as poets feign, tame savage beasts,
 But men as lawless, and as wild as they. Rowe's Commem.
 Not the gods, nor angry Jove will bear
 Thy lawless wand'ring walks in open air. Dryd. En.
 Blind as the Cyclops, and as blind as he,
 They own'd a lawless savage liberty,
 Like that our painted ancestors so priz'd,
 Ere empire's arts their breasts had civiliz'd. Dryden.
 He Meteor-like, flames lawless through the void,
 Destroying others, by himself destroy'd. Pope.
 2. Contrary to law; illegal.
 Take not the quarrel from his powerful arms,
 He needs no indirect nor lawless course
 To cut off those that have offended him. Shakesp. R. III.
 We cite our faults,
 That they may hold excus'd our lawless lives. Shakesp.
 Thou the first, lay down thy lawless claim;
 Thou of my blood who bear'st the Julian name. Dryden.

And tune their own harmonious spheres. Dennis.

To his immortal lays. Dennis.

LAY. adj. [laicus, Latin; lay, la o.] Not clerical; regarding or belonging to the people as distinct from the clergy.

All this they had by law, and none repin'd,
The preference was but due to Levi's kind:
But when some lay preferment fell by chance,
The Gourmands made it their inheritance. Dryden.

L A Z

Laz persons, married or unmarried, being doctors of the civil law, may be chancellors, officials, &c. Ayliffe's Parerg.

It might well startle
Our laz unlearned faith. Rowe's Ambitious Step Mother.

LA'ZER. n. f. [from lay.]

1. A stratum, or row; a bed; one body spread over another.

A layer of rich mould beneath, and about this natural earth to nourish the fibres. Evelyn's Kalendar.

The terrestrial matter is disposed into strata or layers, placed one upon another, in like manner as any earthy sediment, settling down from a flood in great quantity, will naturally be. Woodward's Natural History.

2. A sprig of a plant.

Many trees may be propagated by layers: this is to be performed by fitting the branches a little way, and laying them under the mould about half a foot; the ground should be first made very light, and, after they are laid, they should have a little water given them: if they do not comply well in the laying of them down, they must be pegged down with a hook or two; and if they have taken sufficient root by the next winter, they must be cut off from the main plants, and planted in the nursery: some twist the branch, or bare the rind; and if it be out of the reach of the ground, they fasten a tub or basket near the branch, which they fill with good mould, and lay the branch in it. Miller.

Transplant also carnation seedlings, give your layers fresh earth, and set them in the shade for a week. Evelyn's Kal.

3. A hen that lays eggs.

The oldest are always reckoned the best layers, and the youngest the best layers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LA'YMAN. n. f. [lay and man.]

1. One of the people distinct from the clergy.

Since a trust must be, the thought it best
To put it out of laymen's power at least,
And for their solemn vows prepar'd a priest. Dryden.

Where can be the grievance, that an ecclesiastical landlord should expect a third part value for his lands, his title as antient, and as legal, as that of a layman, who is seldom guilty of giving such beneficial bargains. Swift.

2. An image.

You are to have a layman almost as big as the life for every figure in particular, besides the natural figure before you. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

LA'YSTALL. n. f. An heap of dung.

Scarce could he footing find in that foul way,
For many corles, like a great lay-stall.

Of murdered men, which therein strewed lay. Fa. Qy.

LA'ZAR. n. f. [from Lazarus in the gospel.] One deformed and nauseous with filthy and pestilential diseases.

They ever after in most wretched case,
Like loathsome lazars, by the hedges lay. Fairy Queen.

I'll be sworn and sworn upon't, the never shrow'd any but lazars. Shakepeare's Trail and Cressida.

I am weary with drawing the deformities of life, and lazars of the people, where every figure of imperfection more resembles me. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Life he labours to refine
Daily, nor of his little stock denies Fit alms, to lazars, merciful, and meek. Philips.

LAZAR-HOUSE. n. f. [lazarus, French; lazzaretto, Italian; LAZARETTO. n. f. from lazarus.] A house for the reception of the diseased; an hospital.

A place
Before his eyes appear'd, sad, noisome, dark,
A lazarus-house it seem'd, where were laid Numbers of all diseases. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. xi.

LA'ZARWORT. n. f. A plant.

LA'ZILY. adv. [from lazy.] Idly; sluggishly; heavily.

The eastern nations view the rising fires,
Whilst night shades us, and lazily retires. Creech.

LA'ZINESS. n. f. [from lazy.] Idleness; sluggishness; heaviness to action.

That instance of fraud and laziness, the unjust steward, who pleaded that he could neither dig nor beg, would quickly have been brought both to dig and to beg too, rather than starve. South's Sermons.

My fortune you have rescued, not only from the power of others, but from my own modesty and laziness. Dryden.

LA'ZING. adj. [from lazy.] Sluggish; idle.

The hands and the feet munitied against the belly: they knew no reason, why the one should be laziness, and pampering itself with the fruit of the other's labour. L'Estrange.

The lot cried, Utinam hoc esset laborare, while he lay laziness and lolling upon his couch. South's Sermons.

LA'ZUL. n. f.

The ground of this stone is blue, veined and spotted with white, white, and a glittering or metallic yellow: it appears to be composed of, first, a white sparry, or crystalline matter; secondly, flakes of the golden or yellow talc; thirdly, a shining yellow substance; this fumes off in the calcination of the stone, and casts a sulphureous smell; fourthly, a bright blue substance, of great use among the painters, under the name of ultramarine; and when rich, is found, upon trial, to yield about one-sixth of copper, with a very little silver. Woodward's Metallick Fossils.

LA'ZY. adj. [This word is derived by a correspondent, with great probability, from a laisse, French; but it is however Teutonic: lazier in Danish, and lazier in Dutch, have the same meaning; and Spelman gives this account of the word: Dividebantur antiqui Saxones, ut testatur Nithardus, in tres ordines; Edhilingos, Frilingos & Lazzos; hoc est nobiles, ingenuos & serviles: quam & nos distinctionem, diu retinimus. Sed Ricardo autem secundo pars servorum maxima se in libertatem vindicavit; sic ut hodie apud Anglos rarior invenitur servus, qui mancipium dicitur. Restat nihilominus antiquæ appellatiosis commemoratio. Ignavos enim hodie lazios dicimus.]

1. Idle; sluggish; unwilling to work.

Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fall gently down, as if they struck their friends. Shakef.

Wicked condemned men will ever live like rogues, and not fall to work, but be lazy, and spend victuals. Bacon.

Whole lazy waters without motion lay. Rescommon.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep,
Indulge his sloth, and batten with his sleep. Dryden.

Like Eastern kings a lazy state they keep,
And close confin'd in their own palace sleep. Pope.

What amazing stupidity is it, for men to be negligent of salvation themselves? to sit down lazy and unactive. Rogers.

2. Slow; tedious.

The ordinary method for recruiting their armies, was now too dull and lazy an expedient to resist this torrent. Clarendon.

LE. is a contraction of lead.

LEA. n. f. [ley, Saxon, a fallow; leag, Saxon, a pasture.] Ground inclosed, not open.

Greatly agast with this piteous plea;
Him rested the good man on the lea. Spens. Pastoral.

Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas
Of wheat, rye, barley, fetches, oats and peas. Shakef.

Her fallow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon. Shakepeare's Henry V.

Dry up thy harrow'd veins, and plough-torn leas,
Whereof ingrateful man with liquorish draughts,
And mortels unctuous, greases his pure mind. Shakef.

Such court guise,
As Mercury did first devise,
With the minging Dryades,
On the lawns, and on the leas. Milton.

LEAD. n. f. [leas, Saxon.]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold; for, though it is considerably lighter than quicksilver, as this wants malleability, it ought not to be reckoned in the class of metals.

Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold: it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specific gravity of lead is to that of water as 11322 to 1000. Lead, when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except Mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat: it afterwards vitrifies with the baser metals, and carries them off, in form of scoriae, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. Gold, or silver, or copper, become brittle on being mixed with lead in fusion; and, if lead and tin be melted together, the tin is thrown up to the surface in little dusty globes. Lead is found in various countries, but abounds particularly in England, in several kinds of soils and stones. The smoke of the lead works at Mendip in Somersetshire is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease; trees that grow near them have their tops burnt, and their leaves and outcides discoloured and scorched. Hill.

Thou art a soul in bliss, but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakepeare's King Lear.

Of leads, some I can shew you so like steel, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it steel ore. Boyle.

Lead is employed for the refining of gold and silver by the cupel; hereof is made common cerus with vinegar; of cerus, red lead; of plumbum utrum, the best yellow ochre; of lead, and half as much tin, solder for lead. Grew.

2. [In the plural.] Flat roof to walk on.

Stalls, bulks, windows,
Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him. Shakepeare's Coriolanus.

L E A

I would have the tower two stories, and goodly leads upon the top, raised with statues interpolated. Bacon.

To LEAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit with lead in any manner.

He fashioneth the clay with his arm, he applieth himself to lead it over; and he is diligent to make clean the furnace. Ecclef. xxxviii. 30.

There is a traverse placed in a loft, at the right hand of the chair, with a privy door, and a carved window of glass leaded with gold and blue, where the mother sitteth. Bacon.

To LEAD. v. a. preter. I led. [laean, Saxon; leiden, Dutch.]

1. To guide by the hand.

There is a cliff, whose high and bending head
Looks fearfully on the confined deep:
Bring me but to the very brink of it,
And I'll repair the misery, thou dost bear,
With something rich about me: from that place
I shall no leading need. Shakef. King Lear.

Doth not each on the sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering? Luke xii. 15.

They thrust him out of the city, and led him unto the brow of the hill. Luke iv. 29.

2. To conduct to any place.

Save to every man his wife and children, that they may lead them away, and depart. 1 Sam. xxx. 22.

Then brought he me out of the way, and led me about the way without unto the utter gate. Ezek. xlvii. 2.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters. Psal. xxiii. 2.

3. To conduct as head or commander.

Would you lead forth your army against the enemy, and seek him where he is to fight? Spenser on Ireland.

He turns head against the lion's armed jaws;
And being no more in debt to years than thou,
Leads ancient lords, and rev'rend bishops, on
To bloody battles. Shakepeare's Henry IV. p. i.

I wonder much,
Being men of such great leading as you are,
That you foresee not what impediments Drag back our expedition. Shakef. Henry IV. p. i.

If thou wilt have
The leading of thy own revenges, take
One half of my commission, and set down
As best thou art experienc'd. Shakepeare's Coriolanus.

He led me on to mightiest deeds,
Above the nerve of mortal arm,
Against the uncircumcised, our enemies:
But now hath cast me off. Milton's Agonistes.

Christ took not upon him flesh and blood, that he might conquer and rule nations, lead armies, or possess places. South.

He might muster his family up, and lead them out against the Indians, to seek reparation upon any injury. Locke.

4. To introduce by going first.

Which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in. Numb. xxvii. 17.

His guide, as faithful from that day,
As Helperus that leads the sun his way. Fairfax, b. i.

5. To guide; to show the method of attaining.

Human testimony is not so proper to lead us into the knowledge of the essence of things, as to acquaint us with the existence of things. Watts's Logick.

6. To draw; to entice; to allure.

Appoint him a meeting, give him a shew of comfort, and lead him on with a fine baited delay. Shakepeare.

The lord Cottington, being a master of temper, knew how to lead him into a mistake, and then drive him into choler, and then expose him. Clarendon.

7. To induce; to prevail on by pleasing motives.

What I did, I did in honour,
Led by th' impartial conduct of my soul. Shakef. Hen. IV.

—Dim darkness, and this leafy labyrinth. Milton.
O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,
The leafy forest, and the liquid main,
Extends thy uncontroul'd and boundless reign. Dryden.
Her leafy arms with such extent were spread,
That hosts of birds, that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.
So when some swelt'ring travellers retire
To leafy shades, near the cool sunless verge
Of Paraba, Brazilian stream; her tail
A grisly hydra suddenly shoots forth. Philips.
LEAGUE. n. f. [ligue, French; ligo, Latin.]
1. A confederacy; a combination.
You peers, continue this united league:
I every day expect an embassy
From my Redeemer, to redeem me hence.
And now in peace my soul shall part to heav'n,
Since I have made my friends at peace on earth. Shakespeare.
We come to be informed by yourselves,
What the conditions of that league must be. Shakespeare.
Thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field; and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee. Job v. 23.
Go break thy league with Baalha, that he may depart from me. 2 Chron. xvi. 3.
It is a great error, and a narrowness of mind, to think, that nations have nothing to do one with another, except there be either an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in pacts or leagues: there are other bands of society and implicit confederations. Bacon's Holy War.
I, a private person, whom my country
As a league breaker gave up bound, presum'd Single rebellion, and did hostile acts. Milton's Agonistes.
Oh Tyrants, with immortal hate Pursue this race: let there be
'Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Denham.
To LEAGUE. v. n. To unite; to confederate.
Where fraud and falsehood invade society, the band presently breaks, and men are put to a loss where to league and to fasten their dependances. South's Sermons.
LEAGUE. n. f. [lieu, French.]
1. A league; leuca, Latin; from lecb, Welsh; a stone that was used to be erected at the end of every league. Camden.
2. A measure of length, containing three miles.
Ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encount'ed by a mighty rock. Shakespeare.
Ev'n Italy, though many a league remote,
In distant echo's answer'd. Addison.
LEAGUED. adj. [from league.] Confederated.
And now thus leagu'd by an eternal bond,
What shall retard the Britons bold designs. Philips.

Behold that dreadful downfall of a rock,
Where yon old filer views the waves from high!
'Tis the convenient leap I mean to try. Dryd. Theocritus.
LEAP-FROG. n. f. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.
If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakespeare's Henry V.
LEAP-YEAR. n. f.
Leap-year or bissextile is every fourth year, and so called from its leaping a day more than year than in a common year:
so that the common year hath 365 days, but the leap-year 366; and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but 28. To find the leap-year you have this rule:
Divide by 4; what's left shall be
For leap-year 0; for part 1, 2, 3. Harris.
That the sun consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely deprave the compute; and this is the occasion of the bissextile or leap-year. Brown's Vulg. Err.
To LEARN. v. a. [learn, Saxon.]
1. To gain the knowledge or skill of.
Learn a parable of the fig-tree. Mat. xxiv. 32.
He, in a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue. Knalles.
Learn, wretches! learn the motions of the mind,
And the great moral end of humankind. Dryd. Persius.
You may rely upon my tender care,
To keep him far from perils of ambition:
All he can learn of me, will be to weep! A. Philips.
2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach; to gain or impart knowledge.]
He would learn
The lion stoop to him in lowly-wife,
A lesson hard. Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i.
You taught me language, and my profit on't
Is, I know not how to curse: the red plague rid you,
For learning me your language. Shakespeare's Tempest.
A thousand more mischances than this one,
Have learn'd me how to brook this patiently. Shak.
Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Ye might learn in us not to think of men above that which is written. 1 Cor. iv. 6.
To LEARN. v. n. To take pattern.
Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly. Mat. xi. 29.

no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another.
Bacon's Natural History, N^o. 237.
LEARNED. adj. [from learn.]
1. Veried in science and literature.
It is indifferent to the matter in hand, which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.
Some by old words to fame have made pretence:
Such labour'd nothings, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile. Pope.
The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach. Swift.
The best account is given of them by their own authors:
but I trust more to the table of the learned bishop of Bath.
Arbutnot on Coins.
2. Skilled; skillful; knowing.
Though train'd in arms, and learn'd in martial arts,
Thou chusest not to conquer men but hearts. Granville.
3. Skilled in scholastick knowledge.
Till a man can judge whether they be truths or no, his understanding is but little improved; and thus men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing. Locke.
LEARNEDLY. adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.
Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten. Shak. H. VIII.
The apostle seemed in his eyes but learnedly mad. Hooker.
Ev'ry coxcomb swears as learnedly as they. Swift.
LEARNING. n. f. [from learn.]
1. Literature; skill in languages or sciences; generally scholastick knowledge.
Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish;
then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when solid; and, lastly, its old age, when dry and exhaust. Bacon's Essays.
To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Prior.
As Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians,

LEA

- so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks. Bentley's Sermon.
2. Skill in any thing good or bad.
An art of contradiction by way of scorn, a learning wherewith we were long sithence forewarned, that the miserable times whereunto we are fallen should abound. Hooker.
LEARNER. n. f. [from learn.] One who is yet in his rudiments; one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.
The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon.
Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skillful practised artifican. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.
LEASE. n. f. [laisser, French. Spelman.]
1. A contract by which, in consideration of some payment, a temporary possession is granted of houses or lands.
Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world,
It were a shame to let this land by lease. Shakespeare.
Lords of the world have but for life their lease,
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease. Denham.
I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishops' leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate. Swift.
2. Any tenure.
Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Thou to give the world increase,
Short'ned hast thy own life's lease. Milton.
To LEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To let by lease.
Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tithes to the rector or impropriator, and the small tithes to the vicar. Ayliff's Paragon.
To LEASE. v. n. [from the noun.] To glean; to gather what the harvest men leave.
She in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to chare-work did aspire,
Meat, drink, and two-pence, was her daily hire. Dryden.
LEASER. n. f. [from lease.] Gleaner; gatherer after the reaper.
There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of leasers and gleaners. Swift.
LEASH. n. f. [lesse, French; lesse, Dutch; laccio, Italian.] A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a couler leads his greyhound. Hammer.
Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
What I was, I am;
More straining on, for plucking back; not following
My leash unwillingly. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
The ravished soul being flown such game, would break those leashes that tie her to the body. Boyle.
2. A tierce; three.
I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their Christian names. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Some thought when he did gabble
Th'ad heard three labourers of Babel,
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once. Hudibras, p. i.
3. A band wherewith to tie any thing in general.
Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull devils. Dennis's Letters.
To LEASH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to hold in a string.
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels,
Leash'd in like hounds, should famine, sword, and fire,
Crouch for employment. Shakespeare's Henry V.
LEASING. n. f. [leaze, Saxon.] Lies; falsehood.
O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and seek after leasing? Psal. iv. 2.
He 'mongst ladies would their fortunes read
Out of their hands, and merry leasings tell. Hub. Tale.
He hates foul leasings and vile flattery,
Two filthy blots in noble gentery. Hubbard's Tale.
That false pilgrim which that leasing told,
Was indeed old Archimago. Spenser's Fairy Queen.
I have ever narrified my friends
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbld past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp'd the leasing. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
As folks, quoth Richard, prone to leasings,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
Then prove what they have once asserted,
Nor care to have their lie deferred:
Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.
Trading free shall thrive again,
Nor leasings lead affright the swain. Gay's Pastorals.
LEAST. adj. the superlative of little. [leaze, Saxon. This word

By your leave, Ireneus, notwithstanding all this your careful forelight, methinks I see an evil lurk unspied. Spenser.
When him his dearest Una did behold,
Disdaining life, desiring leave to dye. Spenser.
I make bold to press upon you.
—You're welcome; give us leave, drawer. Shakespeare.
The days
Of Sylla's sway, when the free sword took leave
To act all that it would. Benj. Johnson's Cataline.
Thrice happy snake! that in her sleeve
May boldly creep, we dare not give Our thoughts so unconfin'd a leave. Waller.
No friend has leave to bear away the dead. Dryden.
Offended that we fought without his leave,
He takes this time his secret hate to shew. Dryden.
One thing more I crave leave to offer about syllogism, before I leave it. Locke.
I must have leave to be grateful to any who serves me, let him be never so obnoxious to any party: nor did the tory party put me to the hardship of asking this leave. Pope.
3. Farewell; adieu.
Take leave and part, for you must part forthwith. Shak.
Evils that take leave,

consider, how much he may be beholden to experience. Locke.
8. To bequeath; to give as inheritance.
That peace thou leav'st to thy imperial line,
That peace, Oh happy shade, be ever thine. Dryden.
9. To give up; to resign.
Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Lev. xix. 10.
If a wife man were left to himself, and his own choice, to with the greatest good to himself he could devise; the sum of all his wishes would be this, That there were just such a being as God is. Tillotson, Sermon 1.
10. To permit without interposition.
Whether Elia were a vassal, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.
11. To cease to do; to desist from.
Let us return, left my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us. 1 Sam. ix. 5.
12. To LEAVE off. To desist from; to forbear.
If, upon any occasion, you bid him leave off the doing of any Thing, you must be sure to carry the point. Locke.
In proportion as old age came on, he left off fox-hunting.
Addison's Spectator, N^o. 115.
13. To LEAVE off. To forsake.
He began to leave off some of his old acquaintance, his roaring and bullying about the streets: he put on a serious air. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.
14. To LEAVE out. To omit; to neglect.
My good Camillo;
I am so fraught with curious buifness, that I leave out ceremony. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
Shun they to treat with me too?
No good lady,
You may partake: I have told 'em who you are.
I should be loth to be left out, and here too. Ben. Johnson.
What is set down by order and division doth demonstrate, that nothing is left out or omitted, but all is there. Bacon.
Besfriend till utmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere nice morn on the Indian steep
From her cabin'd loop-hole peep.
We ask, if those subvert
Reason's establish'd maxims, who assert
That we the world's existence may conceive,
Though we one atom out of matter leave. Blackmore.

I always thought this passage left out with a great deal of judgment, by Tucca and Varius, as it seems to contradict a part in the sixth Æneid. Addison on Italy.

TO LEAVE. v. n.
1. To cease; to desist.
She is my essence, and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakespeare.
And since this business so far fair is done,
Let us not leave till all our own be won. Shakesp. H. IV.
He began at the eldest, and left at the youngest. Genes.
2. To leave off. To desist.
Grutus, hoping that they in the castle would not hold out, left off to batter or undermine it, wherewith he perceived he little prevailed. Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
But when you find that vigorous heat abate,
Leave off, and for another summons wait. Rescommon.
3. To leave off. To stop.
Wrongs do not leave off there where they begin,
But still beget new mischiefs in their course. Daniel.
TO LEAVE. v. a. [from levy; lever, French.] To levy; to raise: a corrupt word, made, I believe, by Spenser, for a rhyme.
An army strong the leav'd,
To war on those which him had of his realm bereav'd.
Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. ii.

LE'AVED. adj. [from leaves, of leaf.]
1. Furnished with foliage.
2. Made with leaves or folds.
I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates. Ista. xlv. 1.

LE'AVEN. n. f. [from levain, French; leaven, Latin.]
1. Ferment mixed with any body to make it light; particularly used of four dough mixed in a mass of bread.
It shall not be baken with leaven. Lev. vi. 17.
All fermented meats and drinks are easily digested; and those unfermented, by barm or leaven, are hardly digested. Floyer.
2. Any mixture which makes a general change in the mass.
Many of their propositions favour very strong of the old leaven of innovations. King Charles.
TO LE'AVEN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To ferment by something mixed.
You must tarry the leav'ning, Shakesp. Troil. and Cressida.
Whoever cateth leavened bread, that soul shall be cut off. Exod. xii. 17.
Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings, and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites. Bacon's Atlantis.
2. To taint; to imbue.
That cruel something unpossest,
Corrodes and leavens all the rest. Prior.

LE'AYER. n. f. [from leave.] One who deserts or forsakes.
Let the world rank me in register
A master-leaver, and a fugitive. Shakespeare.

LEAVES. n. f. The plural of leaf.
Parts fit for the nourishment of man in plants are, seeds, roots, and fruits; for leaves they give no nourishment at all.
Bacon's Natural History.

LE'AVINGS. n. f. [from leave.] Remnant; relics; offal: it has no singular.
My father has this morning call'd together,
To this poor hall, his little Roman senate,
The leavings of Pharfalla. Addison's Cato.
Then who can think we'll quit the place,
Or stop and light at Cloe's head, Swift.
With scraps and leavings to be fed.

LE'AVY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves; covered with leaves.
Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel tree,
A garland made on temples for to wear,
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village lord that Whitontide to bear. Sidney.
Now, near enough: your leavy screens throw down,
And show like those you are. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO LECH. v. a. [from lecher, French.] To lick over. Hammer.
Hast thou yet leched the Athenian's eyes
With the love juice. Shakesp. Midsummer Night's Dream.

LE'CHER. n. f. [Derived by Skinner from luxure, old French:
luxuria is used in the middle ages in the same sense.] A whoremaster.
I will now take the lecher; he's at my house; he cannot 'scape me. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins
Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shakespeare.
The lecher soon transforms his mistress; now
In lo's place appears a lovely cow. Dryden.
The sleepy lecher shuts his little eyes,
About his charming chaps the frothy bubbles rise. Dryden.
She yields her charms
To that fair lecher, the strong god of arms. Pope's Ody.

TO LE'CHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To whore.
Die for adultery? no. The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly does lecher in my sight. Shakesp. King Lear.

LEE

Gut eats all day, and lechers all the night. B. Johnson.

LE'CHEROUS. adj. [from lecher.] Leud; lustful.
The sapphires should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous; the emerald should fly to pieces, if it touch the skin of any unchaste person. Dorham.

LE'CHEROUSLY. adv. [from lecherous.] Leudly; lustfully.
LE'CHEROUSNESS. n. f. [from lecherous.] Leudness.

LE'CHERY. n. f. [from lecher.] Leudness; lust.
The rest welter with as little flame in open lechery, as swine do in the common mire. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
Against such leudsters, and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery. Shakespeare.

LE'CTION. n. f. [from lectio, Lat.] A reading; a variety in copies.
Every critick has his own hypothesis: if the common text be not favourable to his opinion, a various lection shall be made authentic. Watts's Logic.

LECTURE. n. f. [from lecture, French.]
1. A discourse pronounced upon any subject.
Mark him, while Dametas reads his rustick lecture unto him, how to feed his beasts before noon, and where to shade them in the extreme heat. Sidney, b. ii.
Wrangling pedant,
When in music we have spent an hour,
Your lecture shall have leisure for as much. Shakesp.
When letters from Cesar were given to Rufinus, he refused to open them till the philosopher had done his lectures. Taylor's Holy Living.
Virtue is the solid good, which tutors should not only read lectures and talk of, but the labour and art of education should furnish the mind with, and fasten there. Locke.
Numidia will be blest by Cato's lectures. Addison's Cato.

2. The act or practice of reading; perusal.
In the lecture of holy scripture, their apprehensions are commonly confined unto the literal sense of the text. Brown.

3. A magisterial reprimand.
TO LE'CTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To instruct formally.
2. To instruct insolently and dogmatically.

LE'CTURER. n. f. [from lecture.] An instructor; a teacher by way of lecture; a preacher in a church hired by the parish to assist the rector or vicar.
If any minister refused to admit into his church a lecturer recommended by them, and there was not one orthodox or learned man recommended, he was presently required to attend upon the committee. Clarendon.

LE'CTURESHIP. n. f. [from lecture.] The office of a lecturer.
He got a lectureship in town of sixty pounds a year, where he preached constantly in person. Swift.

LED. part. pret. of lead.
Then shall they know that I am the Lord your God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen. Ezek. xxxix. 28.
The leaders of this people caused them to err, and they that are led of them are destroyed. Ista. ix. 16.
As in vegetables and animals, so in most other bodies, not propagated by feed, it is the colour we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

LEDGE. n. f. [from leggen, Dutch, to lie.]
1. A row; layer; stratum.
The lowest ledge or row should be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar: a general caution for all parts in building contiguous to board. Watson's Architecture.
2. A ridge rising above the rest.
The four parallel sticks rising above five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side. Gulliver.
3. Any prominence, or rising part.
Beneath a ledge of rocks his fleet he hides,
The bending brow above, a safe retreat provides. Dryden.

LEDHORSE. n. f. [from led and horse.] A sumpter horse.

LEE. n. f. [from lee, French.]
1. Dregs; sediment; refuse.
My cloaths, my sex, exchange'd for thee, Prior.
I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee.
2. [Sea term; supposed by Skinner from leau, French.] It is generally that side which is opposite to the wind, as the lee shore is that the wind blows on. To be under the lee of the shore, is to be close under the weather shore. A leeward ship is one that is not fast by a wind, to make her way so good as the might. To lay a ship by the lee, is to bring her so that all her sails may lie against the masts and throw'd flat, and the wind to come right on her broadside, so that she will make little or no way.
If we, being form-beaten in the bay of Biscay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our transporting ships with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet, and the Azores. Raleigh's Apology.
The Hollanders were wont to ride before Dunkirk with the wind at north west, making a lee shore in all weathers.
Raleigh's Essay.
Unprovided of tackling and victualling, they are forced to sea by a storm; yet better do so than venture splitting and sinking on a lee shore. King Charles.

LEE

Him, haply slum'ring on the Norway foam;
The pilot of some small night-founder'd kiff,
Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fix'd anchor in his foaly mind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. i.

Batter'd by his lee they lay,
The passing winds through their torn canvass play. Dryden.

LEECH. n. f. [from leech, Saxon.]
1. A physician; a professor of the art of healing: whence we still use cowleech.
A leech, the which had great insight
In that disease of griev'd conscience,
And well could cure the same; his name was patience.
Spenser's Fairy Queen, b. i.
Her words prevail'd, and then the learned leech
His cunning hand 'gan to his wounds to lay,
And all things else the which his art did teach. Po. Qu.
Phyick is their bane.
The learned leeches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryden.
Wife leeches will not vain receipts obtrude:
Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill; Dryden.
Till some safe crisis.
The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and toil'd,
Tried every health restoring herb and gum,
And wearied out his painful skill in vain. Rowe's J. Shore.

A skilful leech;
They say, had wrought this blessed deed;
This leech Arbutnot was yclept. Gay's Pastorals.

2. A kind of small water serpent, which fastens on animals, and sucks the blood: it is used to draw blood where the lancet is less safe, whence perhaps the name.
I drew blood by leeches behind his ear. Wesman's Surg.
Sticking like leeches, till they burst with blood,
Without remorse insatiably. Rescommon.

TO LEECH. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with medica-ments.

LEECHCRAFT. n. f. [from leech and craft.] The art of healing.
We study speech; but others we persuade:
We leechcraft learn; but others cure with it. Davies.

LEEF. adj. [from lieve, Dutch.] Kind; fond.
Whilome all these were low and leef,
And lov'd their flocks to feed;
They never strove to be the chief,
And simple was their weed. Spenser's Pastorals.

LEEK. n. f. [from leac, Saxon; leek, Dutch; leek, Eric.]
Its flower consists of six pedals, and is shaped, as it were, like a bell; in the center arises the point, which afterward becomes a roundish fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds: to these notes may be added, the flamins are generally broad and flat, ending in three capilla-ments, of which the middle one is furnished with a chive;
the flowers are also gathered into almost globular bunches:
the roots are long, cylindrical, and coated, the coats ending in plain leaves. Miller.

Know'st thou Flellen? — Yes.
— Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate, Upon St. David's day. Shakespeare's Henry V.
Leek to the Welsh, to Dutchmen butter's dear. Gay.
We use acid plants inwardly and outwardly in gangrenes;
in the scurvy, water-cresses, horse-radish, garlic, or leek potage. Floyer on Humours.

LEER. n. f. [from leer, Saxon.]
1. An oblique view.
I spy entertainment in her; she gives the leer of invitation.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
Aside the devil turn'd
For envy, yet with jealous leer malign
Ey'd them askance. Milton's Par. Lost, b. iv.

2. A laboured cast of countenance.
Damn with faint praise, concede with civil leer. Pope.
I mingle a statesman full before my sight;
A bloated monster in all his geer,
With shameless visage, and perfidious leer. Swift.

TO LEER. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To look obliquely; to look archly.
I will leer upon him as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me. Shakesp. Henry IV.
I wonder whether you taste the pleasure of independency, or whether you do not sometimes leer upon the court. Swift.

2. To look with a forced countenance.
Bertran has been taught the arts of courts,
To gild a face with smiles, and leer a man to ruin. Dryd.

LEES. n. f. [from lees, French.] Dregs; sediment: it has seldom a singular.
This proceeded by reason of the old humour of those countries, where the memory of King Richard was so strong, that it lay like lees in the bottom of mens hearts; and if the vessel was but stirred, it would come up. Bacon's Henry VII.
If they love lees, and leave the luty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the wine. B. Johnson.

LEG

Those lees that trouble it refine
The agitated soul of generous wine. Dryden.

TO LEESE. v. a. [from lefen, Dutch.] To lose: an old word.
Then fell to thy profit both butter and cheese, Tusser.
Who buieth it sooner the more he shall leese.
No cause, nor client fat, will Chevril leese,
But as they come on both sides he takes fees;
And pleafeth both: for while he melts his grease
For this, that wins for whom he holds his peace. B. Johnson.
How in the port our fleet dear time did leese,
Withering like prisoners, which lie but for fees. Donne.

LEET. n. f.
Leet, or lete, is otherwise called a law-day. The word seemeth to have grown from the Saxon leese, which was a court of jurisdiction above the wapentake or hundred, comprehending three or four of them, otherwise called thirfling, and contained the third part of a province or shire:
these jurisdictions, one and other, be now abolished, and swallowed up in the county court. Cowell.

Who has a breast so pure,
But some uncleanly apprehensions
Keep leets and law-days, and in sessions sit With meditations lawful. Shakespeare's Othello.
You would present her at the leet,
Because she bought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shak.

LE'EWARD. adj. [from lee and ward, Saxon.]
1. Towards the wind. See LEE.
The classic were called long ships, the onerarie round, because of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the stowage of goods, was not the fittest for sailing, because of the great quantity of leeward way, except when they failed full before the wind. Arbutnot.
Let no statesman dare,
A kingdom to a ship compare;
Left he should call our commonweal
A vessel with a double keel;
Which just like ours, new rigg'd and man'd,
And got about a league from land,
By change of wind to leeward slide,
The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

LEFT. participle preter. of leave.
Alas, poor lady! desolate and left;
I weep myself to think upon thy words. Shakespeare.
Had such a river as this been left to itself, to have found its way out from among the Alps, whatever windings it had made, it must have formed several little seas. Addison.
Were I left to myself, I would rather aim at instructing than diverting; but if we will be useful to the world, we must take it as we find it. Addison's Spectator, N. 179.

LEFT. adj. [from left, Dutch; levis, Latin.] Sinistrous; not right.
That there is also in men a natural prepotency in the right, we cannot with constancy affirm, if we make observation in children, who permitted the freedom of both hands, do ofttimes confine it unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Brown's Vulgar Errors, b. iv.

The right to Pluto's golden palace guides,
The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden's Æn.
The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bound;
The commons where they can. Dryden.

A raven from a wither'd oak,
Left of their lodging was oblig'd to croak;
That omen lik'd him not. Dryden.
The left foot naked when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right. Dryden.
The man who struggles in the fight,
Fatigues left arm as well as right. Prior.

LEFT-HANDED. adj. [from left and hand.] Using the left-hand rather than right.
The limbs are used most on the right-side, whereby custom helpeth; for we see, that some are left-handed, which are such as have used the left-hand most. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
For the seat of the heart and liver on one side, whereby men become left-handed, it happeneth too rarely to countenance an effect so common: for the seat of the liver on the left-side is very monstrous. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

LEFT-HANDEDNESS. n. f. [from left-handed.] Habitual use of
B' ungracious; yet we cannot want that hand. Donne.

LEG. n. f. [from leg, Danish; leggar, Mandick.]
1. The limb by which we walk; particularly that part between the knee and the foot.
They haste; and what their tardy feet deny'd,
The trusty staff, their better leg, supply'd. Dryden.
Purging comfits, and ants eggs,
Had almost brought him off his legs. Hudibras.
Such intrigues people cannot meet with, who have nothing but legs to carry them. Addison's Guardian.

2. An

LEG

2. An act of obedience.
At court, he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kifs his hand, and fay nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap.
Shakeſp. All's well that ends well.
Their horſes never give a blow,
But when they make a leg, and bow. Hudibras, p. iii.
If the boy ſhould not put off his hat, nor make legs very gracefully, a dancing-maſter will cure that defect. Locke.
He made his leg, and went away. Swift.
3. To ſtand on his own legs; to ſupport himſelf.
Perſons of their fortune and quality could well have ſtood upon their own legs, and needed not to lay in for countenance and ſupport. Collier of Friendship.
4. That by which any thing is ſupported on the ground: as, the leg of a table.
LEGACY. n. f. [legatum, Latin.]
Legacy is a particular thing given by laſt will and teſtament.
If there be no ſuch thing apparent upon record, they do as if one ſhould demand a legacy by force and virtue of ſome written teſtament, wherein there being no ſuch thing ſpecified, he pleadeth that there it muſt needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the teſtator bore him; imagining, that theſe, or the like proofs, will convict a teſtament to have that in it, which other men can no-where by reading find. Hooker, b. iii.
Go you to Cæſar's houſe;
Fetch the will hither, and we ſhall determine
How to cut off ſome charge in legacies. Shakeſp. J. Cæſar.
Good counſel is the beſt legacy a father can leave a child.
L'Eſtrange's Fables.
When he thought you gone
T' augment the number of the bleſſ'd above,
He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love;
Nor arm'd, his brothers portions to invade,
But to defend the preſent you had made. Dryden.
When the heir of this vaſt treasure knew,
How large a legacy was left to you,
He wiſely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.
Leave to thy children tumult, ſtrife, and war,
Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.
- LEGAL. adj. [legal, French; leges, Latin.]*

- LEGATE. n. f. [legatus, Latin; legat, French; legato, Italian.]*
1. A deputy; an ambaffador.
The legates from th' Ætolian prince return:
Sad news they bring, that after all the coſt,
And care employ'd, their embaffy is loſt. Dryden. Eneid.
2. A kind of ſpiritual embaffador from the pope; a commiſſioner deputed by the pope for eccleſiaſtical affairs.
Look where the holy legate comes apace,
To give us warrant from the hand of heav'n. Shakeſp. Atterbury.
Upon the legate's ſummons, he ſubmitted himſelf to an examination, and appeared before him.
- LEGATE. n. f. [from legatum, Lat.]* One who has a legacy left him.
If he chance to ſcape this diſmal bout,
The former legates are blotted out. Dryden's Juvenal.
My will is, that if any of the above-named legates ſhould die before me, that then the reſpective legacies ſhall revert to myſelf. Swift.
- LEGATION. n. f. [legatio, Latin.]* Deputation; commiſſion; embaffy.

LEG

- It will be found, that after a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation or indiction of a war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but is left at large. Bacon's War with Spain.
In the attiring and ornament of their bodies the duke had a fine and unaffected politeneſs, and upon occaſion coſtly, as in his legations. Wotton.
- LEGATOR. n. f. [from lego, Latin.]* One who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Bequeath'd by ſome legator's laſt intent. Dryden.
- LEGEND. n. f. [legenda, Latin.]*
1. A chronicle or regiſter of the lives of ſaints.
Legends being grown in a manner to be nothing elſe but heaps of frivolous and ſcandalous vanities, they have been even with diſdain thrown out, the very neſts which bred them abhorring them. Hooker, b. v.
There are in Rome two ſets of antiquities, the chriſtian and the heathen; the former, though of a freſher date, are ſo embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little ſatisfaction. Addiſon's Remarks on Italy.
2. Any memorial or relation.
And in this legend all that glorious deed
Read, whilſt you arm you; arm you whilſt you read. Fairfax, b. i.
3. An incredible unauthentic narrative.
Who can ſhow the legends, that record
More idle tales, or fables ſo abſurd. Blackmore.
It is the way and means of attaining to heaven, that makes profane ſcorners ſo willingly let go the expectation of it. It is not the articles of the creed, but the duty to God and their neighbour, that is ſuch an inconſiſtent incredible legend. Bentley's Sermons.
4. Any inſcription; particularly on medals or coins.
Compare the beauty and comprehenſiveſs of legends on ancient coins. Addiſon on Medals.

When a Spaniard would write a letter by him, the Indian would marvel how it should be possible, that he, to whom he came, should be able to know all things. Abbot.
The asses will do very well for trumpeters, and the hares will make excellent letter carriers. L'Estrange's Fables.
The stile of letters ought to be free, easy, and natural; as near approaching to familiar conversation as possible: the two best qualities in conversation are, good humour and good breeding; those letters are therefore certainly the best that shew the most of these two qualities. Walsh.
Mrs. P. B. has writ to me, and is one of the best letter writers I know; very good sense, civility, and friendship, without any stiffness or constraint. Swift.
3. The literal or expressed meaning.
Touching translations of holy scripture, we may not disallow of their painful travels herein, who strictly have tied themselves to the very original letter. Hooker, b. v.
In obedience to human laws, we must observe the letter of the law, without doing violence to the reason of the law, and the intention of the lawgiver. Taylor's holy living.
Those words of his must be understood not according to the bare rigour of the letter, but according to the allowances of expression. South's Sermons.
What! since the pretor did my letters loose,
And left me freely at my own dispose,
May I not live without controul and awe,
Excepting still the letter of the law? Dryden's Persius.
4. Letters without the singular: learning.
The Jews marvelled, saying, How knoweth this man letters, having never learned? John vii. 15.
5. Any thing to be read.
Good laws are at best but a dead letter. Addis. Freeholder.
6. Type with which books are printed.
The iron lades that letter founders use to the casting of printing letters, are kept constantly in melting metal. Moxon.
To LETTER. v. a. [from letter.] To stamp with letters.
I observed one weight lettered on both sides; and I found on one side, written in the dialect of men, and underneath it, calamities; on the other side was written, in the language of the gods, and underneath, blessings. Addis.
LETTERED. adj. [from letter.] Literate; educated to learning.
A martial man, not sweetened by a lettered education, is apt to have a tincture of sornels. Collier on Pride.
LETUCE. n. f. lactuca, Latin.]
The lettuce hath a fibrous root, which is, for the most part, annual; the leaves are smooth, and grow alternately upon the branches; the stalks are, for the most part, tender, slender, and stiff, and commonly terminate in a sort of umbrella; the cup of the flower is oblong, slender, and scaly; the seeds are oblong, depressed, and generally terminate in a point: the species are, common or garden lettuce; cabbage lettuce; Silesia lettuce; white and black cos; white cos; red capuchin lettuce. Miller.
Fat colworts, and comforting purslains,
Cold lettuce, and refreshing rosmarine. Spenser.

Forth rush the levant, and the ponent winds,
Eurus and Zephyr. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. x.
LEVANT. n. f. The east, particularly those coasts of the Mediterranean east of Italy.
LEVATOR. n. f. [Lat.] A chirurgical instrument, whereby depressed parts of the skull are lifted up.
Some surgeons bring out the bone in the bore; but it will be safer to raise it up with your levator, when it is but lightly retained in some part. Wifeman's Surgery.
LEUCOPHEGMACY. n. f. [from leucophegmatick.] Paleness, with viscid juices and cold sweatings.
Spirits produce debility, flatulency, fevers, leucophegmacy, and dropsies. Arbutnot on Aliments.
LEUCOPHEGMATICK. adj. [λευκός and φλέγμα.] Having such a constitution of body where the blood is of a pale colour, viscid, and cold, whereby it stuffs and bloats the habit, or raises white tumours in the feet, legs, or any other parts; and such are commonly asthmatick and dropical. Quincy.
Asthmatic persons have voracious appetites, and for want of a right sanguification are leucophegmatick. Arbutnot.
LEVÉE. n. f. [French.]
1. The time of rising.
2. The concourse of those who croud round a man of power in a morning.

LEV

- The servile rout their careful Caesar praise;
Him they extol, they worship him alone,
They croud his levees, and support his throne.
Wouldst thou be first minister of state?
To have thy levees crouded with resort.
Of a depending, gaping, servile court. Dryden's Juvenal.
None of her Sylvan subjects made their court,
Levees and couches paid without resort. Dryden.
LEVEL. adj. [level, Saxon.]
1. Even; not having one part higher than another.
The garden, seated on the level floor,
She left behind, and locking ev'ry door,
Thought all secure. Dryden's Boace.
Be level in preferments, and you will soon be as level in your learning. Bentley.
2. Even with any thing else; in the same line with any thing.
Our navy is address'd, our pow'r collected,
Our substitutes in absence well invest'd,
And ev'ry thing lies level to our wish. Shakespeare, Henry IV.
There is a knowledge which is very proper to man, and lies level to human understanding; and that is, the knowledge of our Creator, and of the duty we owe to him. Tillotson's Sermons.
To LEVEL. v. a. [from the adjective.]
1. To make even; to free from inequalities.
2. To reduce to the same height with something else.
Reason can never assent to the admission of those brutish appetites which would over-run the soul, and level its superior with its inferior faculties. Decay of Piety.
Behold the law
And rule of beings in your maker's mind:
And thence, like limbeck, rich ideas draw,
To fit the level'd use of humankind. Dryden.
3. To lay flat.
We know by experience, that all downright rains do evermore dissolve the violence of outrageous winds, and beat down and level the swelling and mountainous billows of the sea. Raleigh.
He will thy foes with silent shame confound,
And their proud structures level with the ground. Sandys.
With unresist'd might the monarch reigns,
He levels mountains, and he raises plains;
And not regarding difference of degree,
Abas'd your daughter, and exalted me. Dryden.
4. To bring to equality of condition.
5. To point in taking aim; to aim.
One to the gunners on St. Jago's tow'r,
Bid 'em for shame,
Level their canon lower. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
6. To direct to any end.
The whole body of puritans was drawn to be abettors of all villainy by a few men, whose designs from the first were levelled to destroy both religion and government. Swift.
To LEVEL. v. n.
1. To aim at; to bring the gun or arrow to the same direction with the mark.
The glory of God, and the good of his church, was the thing which the apostles aimed at, and therefore ought to be the mark whereto we also level. Hooker, b. iv.
2. To conjecture; to attempt to guess.
I pray thee overname them; and as thou namest them I will describe them; and, according to my description, level at my affection. Shakespeare, Merchant of Venice.
3. To be in the same direction with a mark.
He to his engine flew,
Plac'd near at hand in open view,
And rais'd it till it level'd right,
Against the glow-worm tail of kite. Hudibras, p. ii.
4. To make attempts; to aim.
Ambitious York did level at thy crown. Shakespeare.
LEVEL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A plane; a surface without protuberances or inequalities.
After draining of the level in Northamptonshire, innumerable mice did upon a sudden arise. Hale's Original of Mankind.
Those bred in a mountainous country overtake those that dwell on low levels. Sandys's Travels.
2. Rate; standard.
Love of her made us raise up our thoughts above the ordinary level of the world, so as great clerks do not disdain our conference.
It might perhaps advance their minds so far Above the level of subjection, as To assume to them the glory of that war. Daniel.
The praises of military men inspired me with thoughts above my ordinary level. Dryden.
3. A state of equality.
The time is not far off when we shall be upon the level; I am resolv'd to anticipate the time, and be upon the level with them now: for he is so that neither seeks nor wants them. Auerbury to Pope.
Providence,

LEV

- Providence, for the most part, set us upon a level, and observes a kind of proportion in its dispensations towards us. Addis's Spectator, N^o. 255.
I suppose, by the file of old friend, and the like, it must be somebody there of his own level; among whom his party have, indeed, more friends than I could wish. Swift.
4. An instrument whereby masons adjust their work.
The level is from two to ten feet long, that it may reach over a considerable length of the work: if the plumb-line hang just upon the perpendicular, when the level is set flat down upon the work, the work is level; but if it hangs on either side the perpendicular, the floor or work must be raised on that side, till the plumb-line hang exactly on the perpendicular. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.
5. Rule: borrowed from the mechanick level.
Be the fair level of thy actions laid,
As temperance wills, and prudence may persuade,
And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.
6. The line of direction in which any missile weapon is aimed.
I stood i' th' level
Of a full charg'd confederacy, and gave thanks
To you that choked it. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
As if that name,
Shot from the deadly level of a gun,
Did murder her. Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet.
Thrice happy is that humble pair,
Beneath the level of all care,
Over whose heads those arrows fly,
Of sad distrust and jealousy. Waller.
7. The line in which the sight passes.
Fir'd at first fight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
While from the bounded level of our mind
Short views we take, nor see the lengths behind. Pope.
LEVELLER. n. f. [from level.]
1. One who makes any thing even.
2. One who destroys superiority; one who endeavours to bring all to the same state of equality.
You are an everlasting leveler; you won't allow encouragement to extraordinary merit. Collier on Pride.
LEVELNESS. n. f. [from level.]
1. Evenness; equality of surface.
2. Equality with something else.
The river Tiber is express'd lying along, for so you must remember to draw rivers, to express their levelness with the earth. Peacocks.
LEVELIN. n. f. [levain, French.]
1. Ferment; that which being mixed in bread makes it rise and ferment.
2. Any thing capable of changing the nature of a greater mass; any thing that tinctures the whole.
The matter fermenteth upon the old levin, and becometh more acid. Wifeman's Surgery.
As to the pestilential levains conveyed in goods, it is a false opinion. Arbutnot on Air.
LEVELER. n. f. [levoir, French.]
The second mechanical power, is a balance supported by a hypomochlion; only the centre is not in the middle, as in the common balance, but near one end; for which reason it is used to elevate or raise a great weight; whence comes the name lever.
Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Some draw with cords, and some the monster drive
With rolls and levers. Denham.
In a lever, the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcrum and the weight; which is always by so much lesser, as the disproportion betwixt the weight and the power is greater, and the motion itself more easy. Wilkins's Magick.
Some hoisting levers, some the wheels prepare. Dryden.
You may have a wooden lever, forked at the ends. Mart.
LEVELLET. [levere, French.] A young-hare.
Their travels o'er that silver field does show,
Like track of leverets in morning snow. Waller.
LEVET. n. f. [from lever, French.] A blast on the trumpet; probably that by which the soldiers are called in the morning.
He that led the cavalcade;
Wore a sowgelder's flagellet,
On which he blew as strong a levet;
As well-see'd lawyer on his briefcase. Hudibras.
LEVEROOK. n. f. [lapece, Saxon.] This word is retained in Scotland, and denotes the lark.
The smaller birds have their particular seasons; as, the leverook. Walter's Angler.
If the lust faa 'twill smooze aw the leverooks, Scotch Provs.
LEVABLE. adj. [from levy.] That may be levied.
The sums which any agreed to pay, and were not brought in, were to be leviable by course of law. Bacon's Henry VIII.
LEVATHAN. n. f. [לִיָּוִיִּת.] A water animal mentioned in the book of Job. By some imagined the crocodile, but in poetry generally taken for the whale.

LEW

- We may, as bootless, spend our vain command
Upon th' enraged soldiers in their spoil,
As send our precepts to th' Leviathan, Shakespeare's Henry V.
To come ashore. Job.
Canst thou draw out Leviathan with an hook?
More to embroil the deep; Leviathan,
And his unwieldy train, in dreadful sport
Tempest the loosen'd brine. Thomson's Winter.
TO LEVIGATE. v. a. [levigo, Latin.]
1. To rub or grind to an impalpable powder.
2. To mix till the liquor becomes smooth and uniform.
The chyle is white; as consisting of salt, oil, and water, much levigated or smooth. Arbutnot on Aliments.
LEVIGATION. n. f. [from levigate.]
Levigation is the reducing of hard bodies, as coral, tutty, and precious stones, into a subtle powder, by grinding upon marble with a muller; but unless the instruments are extremely hard, they will so wear as to double the weight of the medicine. Quincy.
LEVITE. n. f. [levita, Latin, from Levi.]
1. One of the tribe of Levi; one born to the office of priesthood among the Jews.
In the Christian church, the office of deacons succeeded in the place of the levites among the Jews, who were as ministers and servants to the priests. Ayliffe's Parergon.
2. A priest: used in contempt.
LEVITICAL. adj. [from levite.] Belonging to the levites; making part of the religion of the Jews.
By the levitical law, both the man and the woman were stoned to death; so heinous a crime was the sin of adultery. Ayliffe's Parergon.
LEVITY. n. f. [levitas, Latin.]
1. Lightness; not heaviness: the quality by which any body has less weight than another.
He gave the form of levity to that which ascend'd; to that which descend'd, the form of gravity. Raleigh.
This bubble, by reason of its comparative levity to the fluidity that encloses it, would necessarily ascend to the top. Bentley's Sermons.
2. Inconstancy; changeableness.
They every day broached some new thing; which restless levity they did interpret to be their growing in spiritual perfection. Hooker.
Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots sword-knots strive,
Beaus banish beaus, and coaches coaches drive,
This erring mortals levity may call. Pope.
3. Unsteadiness; laxity of mind.
I unbosom'd all my secrets to thee;
Not out of levity, but over-pow'd
By thy request. Milton's Agonistes.
4. Idle pleasure; vanity.
He never employed his omnipotence out of levity or ostentation, but as the necessities of men required. Calamy.
5. Trifling gaiety; want of seriousness.
Our graver business frowns at this levity. Shakespeare.
Hopton abhorred the licence, and the levities, with which he saw too many corrupted.
That spirit of religion and seriousness vanish'd, and a spirit of levity and libertinism, infidelity and prophaneness, started up in the room of it. Auerbury's Sermons.
TO LEVY. v. a. [levoir, French.]
1. To raise; to bring together men.
He resolv'd to finish the conquest of Ireland, and to that end levied a mighty army. Davies on Ireland.
2. To raise money.
Levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war. Numb.
Instead of a ship, he should levy upon his county such a sum of money. Clarendon.
3. To make war. This sense, though Milton's, seems improper.
They live in hatred, enmity, and strife,
Among themselves, and levy cruel wars. Milton.
LEVY. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of raising money or men.
They have already contributed all their superfluous hands, and every new levy they make must be at the expence of their farms and commerce. Addis's State of the War.
2. War raised.
Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison,
Malice domestick, foreign levy, nothing,
Can touch him further! Shakespeare's Macbeth.
LEWD. adj. [leuede, Saxon.]
1. Lay; not clerical. Obsolete.
For lewd men this book I writ.
So these great clerks their little wisdom shew
To mock the lewd, as learn'd in this as they. Davies.
2. Wicked; bad; naughty.
If some be admitted into the ministry, either void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemn'd? Whitgift.
Before

LIB

Before they did oppress the people, only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same oppressions by warrant. Davies on Ireland.

3. Lufful; libidinous.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
 But on his knees at meditation. Shakespeare's Rich. III.

Then lewd Anchemolus he laid in dust,
 Who stain'd his stepdam's bed with impious lust. Dryden.

LE'WDLY. adj. [from lewd.]

1. Wickedly; naughtily.

A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent,
 Have practis'd dangerously against your state. Shakespeare.

2. Libidinally; lustfully.

He lov'd fair lady Elfred, lewdly lov'd,
 Whose wanton pleasures him too much did please,
 That quite his heart from Guendeline remov'd. Spenser.

So lewdly dull his idle works appear,
 The wretched texts deserve no comments here. Dryden.

LE'WDNESS. n. f. [from lewd.] Lustful licentiousness.

Suffer no lewdness, nor indecent speech,
 Th' apartment of the tender youth to reach. Dryd. Juven.

Damianus's letter to Nicholas is an authentick record of the lewdness committed under the reign of celibacy. Atterbury.

LE'WDSTER. n. f. [from lewd.] A lecher; one given to criminal pleasures.

Against such lewdsters, and their lechery, Shakespeare.

Those that betray them do no treachery. Shakespeare.

LE'WTS D'OR. n. f. [French.] A golden French coin, in value twelve livres, now settled at seventeen shillings. Dict.

LEXICOGRAPHY. n. f. [αλεξικλον and γραφω; lexicographie, French.] A writer of dictionaries; a harmless drudge, that busies himself in tracing the original, and detailing the signification of words.

Commentators and lexicographers acquainted with the Sy-riac language, have given these hints in their writings on scripture. Watts's Improvement of the Mind.

LEXICOGRAPHY. n. f. [αλεξικλον and γραφω.] The art or practice of writing dictionaries.

LEXICON. n. f. [αλεξικλον.] A dictionary; a book teaching the signification of words.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet if he had not studied the solid things in them as well as the words and lexi- cons, yet he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man as any yeoman competently wise in his mother dialect only. Milton.

LEY. n. f.

Ley, lee, lay, are all from the Saxon leag, a field or pasture, by the usual melting of the letter x or g. Gibson's Cam.

LI'ABLE. n. f. [liable, from liar, old French.] Obnoxious;
 not exempt; subject.

But what is strength without a double share
 Of wisdom? vast, unwieldy, burthenfome,
 Proudly secure, yet liable to fall
 By weakest subtleties. Milton's Agonistes.

The English boast of Spenser and Milton, who neither of them wanted genius or learning; and yet both of them are liable to many censures. Dryden's Juvenal.

This, or any other scheme, coming from a private hand, might be liable to many defects. Swift.

LIAR. n. f. [from lie.] This word would analogically be liar; but this orthography has prevailed, and the convenience of distinction from liar, he who lies down, is sufficient to confirm it. One who tells falsehood; one who wants veracity.

She's like a liar, gone to burning hell!
 'Twas I that kill'd her. Shakespeare's Othello.

He approves the common liar, fame,
 Who speaks him thus at Rome. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

I do not reject his observation as untrue, much less condemn the person himself as a liar, whensoever it seems to be contradicted. Boyle.

Thy better soul abhors a liar's part,
 Wife is thy voice, and noble is thy heart. Pope's Odyssey.

LI'ARD. adj.

1. Mingled roan.

2. Liard in Scotland denotes gray-haired: as, he's a liard old man.

LIBA'TION. n. f. [libatio, Latin.]

1. The act of pouring wine on the ground in honour of some deity.

In digging new earth pour in some wine, that the vapour of the earth and wine may comfort the spirits, provided it be not taken for a heathen sacrifice, or libation to the earth.
Bacon's Natural History.

2. The wine so poured.

They had no other crime to object against the Christians, but that they did not offer up libations, and the smoke of sacrifices, to dead men. Stillington on Rom. Idolatry.

The goblet then she took, with nectar crown'd,
 Sprinkling the first libations on the ground. Dryden's An.

LIB

LI'BEARD. n. f. [libard, German; leopardus, Lat.] A leopard.

Make the libard stern,
 Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn.

The libard, and the tiger, as the mole
 Rifting, the crumbled earth above them threw. Milton.

The torrid parts of Africk are by Pilo resembled to a libard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the diversities of habitations, or towns of Africk. Brerewood.

LIBEL. n. f. [libellus, Latin; libelle, French.]

1. A satire; defamatory writing; a lampoon.

Are we reproached for the name of Christ? that ignominy serves but to advance our future glory; every such libel here becomes panegyric there. Decay of Piety.

Good heav'n! that fots and knaves should be so vain,
 To wish their vile resemblance may remain!
 And stand recorded, at their own request,
 To future days, a libel or a jest. Dryden.

2. [In the civil law.] A declaration or charge in writing against a person in court.

To LI'BEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To spread defamation;
 generally written or printed.

Sweet scrawls to fly about the streets of Rome:
 What's this but libelling against the senate? Shakespeare.

He, like a privileged spy, whom nothing can Discredit, libels now 'gainst each great man. Donne.

To LI'BEL. v. a. To satirize; to lampoon;

Is then the peage of England any thing dishonoured when a peer suffers for his treason? if he be libelled, or any way defamed, he has his scandalum magnatum to punish the offender. Dryden.

But what so pure which envious tongues will spare?
 Some wicked wits have libelled all the fair. Pope.

LI'BELLER. n. f. [from libel.] A defamer by writing; a lampooner.

Our common libellers are as free from the imputation of wit, as of morality. Dryden's Juvenal.

The squibs are those who, in the common phrase, are called libellers and lampooners. Taylor.

The common libellers, in their invectives, tax the church with an insatiable desire of power and wealth, equally common to all bodies of men. Swift.

LI'BELLOUS. n. f. [from libel.] Defamatory.

His most malicious surmise that had ever been brewed, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet. Watson.

LI'BERAL. adj. [liberalis, Latin; liberal, French.]

1. Not mean; not low in birth; not low in mind.

2. Becoming a gentleman.

3. Munificent; generous; bountiful; not parcimonious.

Her name was Mercy, well known over all
 To be both gracious and eke liberal. Spens. Fa. Quen.

Sparing would shew a worse sin than ill doctrine.
 Men of his way should be most liberal,
 They're set here for examples. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Needs must the pow'r
 That made us, and for us this ample world,
 Be infinitely good, and of his good
 As liberal and free, as infinite. Milton.

There is no art better than to be liberal of praise and commendation to others, in that wherein a man's self hath any perfection. Bacon's Essay.

The liberal are secure alone;
 For what we frankly give, for ever is our own. Granville.

Several clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, are, in their sermons, very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers, as if it were our duty to understand them. Swift.

LIBERALITY. n. f. [liberalitas, Latin; liberalité, Fr.] Munificence; bounty; generosity; generous profusion.

Why should he despair, that knows to court
 With words, fair looks, and liberality? Shakespeare.

Such moderation with thy bounty join,
 That thou may'st nothing give that is not thine;
 That liberality is but cast away,
 Which makes us borrow what we cannot pay. Denham.

LIBERALLY. adv. [from liberal.] Bounteously; bountifully; largely.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. James i. 5.

LI'BERTINE. n. f. [libertin, French.]

1. One unconfin'd; one at liberty.

When he speaks,
 The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
 And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
 To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shakespeare's Hen. V.

2. One who lives without restraint or law.

Man, the lawless libertine, may rove
 Free and unquestion'd. Rowe's Jane Shore.

Want of power is the only bound that a libertine puts to his views upon any of the sex. Clarissa.

LIB

2. One who pays no regard to the precepts of religion.

They say this town is full of couzenage,
 As nimble jugglers, that deceive the eye;
 Digiufed cheaters, prating mountebanks,
 And many such like libertines of sin. Shakespeare.

That word may be applied to some few libertines in the audience. Collier's View of the Stage.

3. [In law; libertinus, Lat.] A freedman; or rather, the son of a freedman.

Some persons are forbidden to be accusers on the score of their sex, as women; others on the score of their age, as pupils and infants; others on the score of their conditions, as libertines against their patrons. Ayliffe's Parergon.

LI'BERTINE. adj. [libertin, French.] Licentious; irreligious.

There are men that marry not, but chuse rather a libertine and impure single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.

Might not the queen make diligent enquiry, if any person about her should happen to be of libertine principles or morals. Swift's Project for Advancement of Religion.

LI'BERTINISM. n. f. [from libertine.] Irreligion; licentiousness of opinions and practice.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of liberty and libertinism, of infidelity and profaneness, started up in the room of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

LI'BERTY. n. f. [liberté, French; libertas, Latin.]

1. Freedom, as opposed to slavery.

My master knows of your being here, and hath threatened to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he swears, he'll turn me away. Shakespeare.

O liberty! thou goddess, heav'nly bright!
 Profuse of blis, and pregnant with delight,
 Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign. Addison.

2. Freedom, as opposed to necessity.

Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other. Locke.

As it is in the motions of the body, so it is in the thoughts of our minds: where any one is such, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the mind, there we are at liberty. Locke.

3. Privilege; exemption; immunity.

His majesty gave not an intire country to any, much less did he grant jura regalia, or any extraordinary liberties. Davies.

4. Relaxation of restraint.

5. Leave; permission.

I shall take the liberty to consider a third ground, which,
 with some men, has the same authority. Locke.

LI'BDINOUS. n. f. [libidinofus, Latin.] Lewd; lustful.

None revolt from the faith; because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are much more restrained from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances and libidinous thoughts had been permitted by the gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless. Bentley.

LI'BDINOUSLY. adv. [from libidinofus.] Lewdly; lustfully.

LI'BRAL. adj. [libralis, Latin.] Of a pound weight. Dict.

LI'BRARIAN. n. f. [librarius, Latin.]

1. One who has the care of a library;

2. One who transcribes or copies books.

Charybdis thrice swallows, and thrice refunds, the waves:
 this must be understood of regular tides. There are indeed but two tides in a day, but this is the error of the librarians. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

LI'BRARY. n. f. [librerie, Fr.] A large collection of books, publick or private.

Then as they 'gan his library to view,
 And antique registers for to avise,
 There chanced to the prince's hand to rise
 An ancient book, high Briton's monuments. Fa. Qu.

Make choice of all my library,
 And so beguile thy sorrow. Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.

I have given you the library of a painter, and a catalogue of such books as he ought to read. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To LI'BRATE. v. a. [libro, Latin.] To poise; to balance;

to hold in equipoise.

LI'BRATION. n. f. [libratio, Latin; libration, French.]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libration, of the body. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Their plinons still
 In loose libration stretch'd, to trust the void Trembling refuse. Thomson's Spring.

2. [In astronomy.]

Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the fir-mament, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libration motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that, at full moon, they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times. These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libra- tion, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the ecliptick, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before; and that, on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured; and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does. Dict. Trev.

LIC

Those planets which move upon their axis, do not all make intire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis. Grew.

LI'BRATORY. adj. [from libro, Lat.] Balancing; playing like a balance.

LICE, the plural of louse.

Red blisters rising on their paps appear,
 And flaming carbuncles, and noisome sweat,
 And clammy dews, that loathsome lice beget;
 Till the slow creeping evil eats his way. Dryden's Virg.

LI'CEBAKE. n. f. [lice and bane.] A plant.

LICENCE. n. f. [licentia, Latin; licence, French.]

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wiser seeing that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Mu-

Taunt my faults

With such full licence, as both truth and malice
 Have power to utter. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

They baul for freedom in their senseless moods,
 And still revolt when truth would set them free;
 Licence they mean, when they cry liberty. Milton.

The privilege that ancient poets claim,
 Now turn'd to licence by too just a name. Rescramon.

Though this be a state of liberty, yet it is not a state of licence; though man, in that state, have an uncontrollable liberty to dispose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself. Locke.

2. A grant of permission.

They sent some to bring them a licence from the senate. Judith xi. 14.

Those few abstract names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

We procured a licence of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery. Addison on Italy.

3. Liberty; permission.

It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself. Act.

To LI'CEUSE. v. a. [licencier, French.]

1. To set at liberty.

He would play well, and willingly, at some games of greatest attention, which shewed, that when he list he could licence his thoughts. Wotton.

2. To permit by a legal grant.

Wit's titans brav'd the skies,
 And the press groan'd with licens'd blasphemies. Pope.

LI'CEUSER. n. f. [from license.] A granter of permission; commonly a tool of power.

LICENTIAE. n. f. [licentia, low Latin.]

1. A man who uses license.

The licentiaes somewhat licentious, least they should prejudice poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling or rejecting a letter, if the sense fall aptly. Camden.

2. A degree in Spanish universities.

A man might, after that time, sue for the degree of a licentiate or master in this faculty. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To LI'CENTIATE. v. a. [licentier, French.] To permit; to encourage by license.

We may not hazard either the stifling of generous inclinations, or the licentiating of any thing that is coarse. L'Estrange.

LICE'NTIOUS. n. f. [licenciosus, French; licentious, Latin.]

1. Unrestrained by law or morality.

Later ages pride, like corn-fed steed,
 Abus'd her plenty, and fat swollen encrease,
 To all licentious lust, and gan exceed
 The measure of her mean, and natural first need. Fa. Qu.

Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?
 And that this body, consecrate to thee,
 With ruffian lust should be contaminate. Shakespeare.

2. Presumptuous; unconfin'd.

The Tyber, whose licentious waves,
 So often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
 Now runs a smooth and inoffensive course. Rescramon.

LICE'NTIOUSLY. adv. [from licentious.] With too much liberty; without just restraint.

LIC

The licentiates somewhat licentiously, least they should pre-judge poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling or rejecting a letter. Camden's Remains.
LICENTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from licentious.] Boundless liberty; contempt of just restraint.

One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained. Ral.
 This custom has been always looked upon, by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty. Swift.
 During the greatest licentiousness of the press, the character of the queen was insulted. Swift.

LICH. n. f. [lice, Saxon.] A dead carcase; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred christians. Salve magna parens. Lichwake is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.

LICHOWL. n. f. [lich and owl.] A sort of owl, by the vulgar supposed to foretell death.

TO LICK. v. a. [liccan, Saxon; lecken, Dutch.]
 1. To pass over with the tongue.
 Esculapius went about with a dog and a she-goat, both which he used much in his cures; the first for licking all ulcered wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach and lungs. Temple.

A bear's a savage beast;
 Whelp'd without form, until the dam
 Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras, p. i.
 He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
 And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dews. Dryden.
 I have seen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trials, to distinguish the age of it by its taste. Addison.

2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.
 At once pluck out
 The multitudinous tongue; let them not lick
 The sweet which is their poison. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 3. To LICK UP. To devour.
 Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us,
 As the ox licketh up the grass. Numb. xxii. 4.

When luxury has lick'd up all thy self,
 Curs'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself:
 Think how posterity will treat thy name. Pope's Horace.
LICK. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow; rough usage; a low word.
 He turned upon me as round as a chafed boar, and gave me a lick across the face. Dryden.

LICKERISH. adj. [liccepa, a glutton, Saxon.]
LICKEROUS. adj. [liccepa, a glutton, Saxon.]

1. Nice in the choice of food; squeamish.
 Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfactions to a liquorish palate. L'Estrange.
 2. Eager; greedy.

Then is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, whereof womankind is so lickerish, is offered unto it. Sidney.
 Strephon, fond boy, delighted, did not know
 That it was love that shin'd in shining maid;
 But lick'rous, poison'd, fain to her would go. Sidney.
 Certain rare manuscripts, fought in the most remote parts by Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the jesuits, liquorish chapmen of all such ware. Watson.

In vain he profer'd all his goods to save
 His body, destin'd to that living grave;
 The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn,
 And nothing but the man would serve her turn. Dryden.
 In some provinces they were so liquorish after man's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it run from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite.
 Wouldst thou seek again to trap me here
 With lickerish baits, fit to ensnare a brute? Milton.

LICKERISHNESS. n. f. [from lickerish.] Niceness of palate.
LICORICE. n. f. [γλυκύριζα; liquoricia, Italian; glycyrrhiza, Latin.] A root of sweet taste.

Liquorice hath a papilionaceous flower; the pointal which arises from the empalement becomes a short pod, containing several kidney-shaped seeds; the leaves are placed by parts joined to the mid-rib, and are terminated by an odd lobe. Miller.

Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, void of smell, and of a taste sweeter than sugar; it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany. This root is excellent in coughs, and all disorders of the lungs. The inspissated juice of this root is brought to us from Spain and Holland; from the first of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Hill's Materia Medica.

LICTOR. n. f. [Latin.] A beadle that attended the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.

Saucy lictors
 Will catch at us like strumpets. Shakef. Ant. and Cleopatra.

LIE

PROCONSULS to their provinces
 Having, or on return, in robes of state,
Lictors and rods the ensigns of their power. Milton.

Democritus could feed his spleen, and shake
 His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ake;
 Though in his country-town no lictors were,
 Nor rods, nor ax, nor tribune. Dryden's Juvenal.

LID. [lith, Saxon; lied, German.]
 1. A cover; any thing that shuts down over a vessel; a lid, cover, or stopple that enters the mouth.
 Hope, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck so close to the lid of the cup, that it was shut down upon her. Addison.
 2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.

Do not for ever with thy veiled lids, Seek for thy noble father in the dust. Shakef. Hamlet.
 Our eyes have lids, our ears still open we keep. Darwin.
 The fields fair eyes saw her, and saw no more,
 But shut their flow'ry lids for ever night,
 And winter strew'd her way. Crashaw.

That eye dropp'd sense distinct and clear,
 As any muse's tongue could speak;
 When from its lid a pearly tear
 Ran trickling down her beauteous cheek. Prior.

The rod of Hermes
 To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix,
 And drive departed souls to Styx:
 That rod was just a type of Sid's,
 Which o'er a British senate's lids
 Could scatter opium full as well,
 And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.

LIE. n. f. [lie, French.] Any thing impregnated with some other body; as, soap or salt.

Chamber-lie breads fleas like a loach. Shakespeare.
 All liquid things concocted by heat become yellow; as, lie, wort, &c. Peasam on Draining.

LIE. n. f. [lige, Saxon.]
 1. A criminal falsehood.

My name's Macbeth.
 —The devil himself could not pronounce a title
 More hateful to mine ear.
 —No; nor more fearful.
 —Thou liest, abhorred tyrant; with my sword
 I'll prove the lie thou speak'st. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

A lie is properly an outward signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind; so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant, or intended, that is properly a lie. South.
 Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lie, than the will can chuse an apparent evil. Dryden.
 When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, this is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea: but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watts's Logic.

2. A charge of falsehood.
 That lie shall lye so heavy on my sword,
 That it shall render vengeance and revenge;
 Till thou the lie giver, and that lie, rest
 In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shakef. Rich. II.
 It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.
 Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with these tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction.
 The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply;
 The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

TO LIE. v. n. [liegan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch.]
 To utter criminal falsehood.

I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here, or be lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakespeare's Othello.
 If a foul lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall reitore that which was delivered. Levit. vi. 1.

Should I lie against my right?
 Inform us, will the emperor treat?
 Or do the prints and papers lie?
TO LIE. v. n. pret. I lay; I have lain or lien. [liegan, Saxon; liegen, Dutch.]

1. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else.
 2. To rest; to lean upon.
 Death lies on her like an untimely flow'r;
 Upon the sweetest flow'r of all the field. Shakespeare.
 Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee. Epitaph on Vanbrugh.

3. To

And captains and lieutenants flight for me. Gey.

LIEUTENANTSHIP. n. f. [from lieutenant.] The rank or office of lieutenant.
LIFE. n. f. plural lives. [Lipian, to live, Saxon.]
1. Union and co-operation of soul with body.
On thy life no more.
—My life I never held but as a pawz
To wage against thy foes; nor fear to lose it,
Thy safety being the motive. Shakespeare's King Lear.
She shews a body rather than a life.
A statue than a breather. Shakel. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Gen. i. 20.
The identity of the same man consists in nothing but a participation of the same continued life, by constantly fleeting particles of matter, in succession vitally united to the same organized body. Locke.
So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,
And steal thyself from life by slow decays. Pope.

2. Present state.
O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
So like, that we may take the one for 'other!
Dream of a shadow! a reflection made
From the false glories of the gay reflected bow,
Is more a solid thing than thou!
Thou weak built isthmus, that do'st proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities;
Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain,
But, broken and o'erwhelm'd, the ocean meets again. Cowley.

When I consider life 'tis all a cheat,
Yet fool'd by hope men favour the deceit,
Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falser than the former day;
Lies more; and when it says we shall be blest
With some new joy, takes off what we possess.
Strange cozenage! none would live past years again,
Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give:
I'm tir'd of waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old. Dryden.
Howe'er 'tis well that while mankind
Through life's perverse meanders errs,
He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares. Prior.

3. Enjoyment, or possession of terrestrial existence.
Then avarice 'gan through his veins to inspire
His greedy flames, and kindle life devouring fire. Fa. Qu.
Their complot is to have my life.
And, if my death might make this island happy,
And prove the period of their tyranny,
I would expend it with all willingness. Shakespeare.
Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st
Live well, how long or short permit to heav'n. Milton.
Untam'd and fierce the tyger still remains,
And tirs his life with biting on his chains. Prior.
He entreated me not to take his life, but exact a sum of money. Notes on the Odyssey.

4. Blood, the supposed vehicle of life.
His gushing entrails smok'd upon the ground,
And the warm life came issuing through the wound. Pope.

5. Conduct; manner of living with respect to virtue or vice.
Henry and Edward, brightest sons of fame,
And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name;
After a life of glorious toils endur'd,
Clos'd their long glories with a sigh.
I'll teach my family to lead good lives. Mrs. Barker.

6. Condition; manner of living with respect to happiness and misery.
Such was the life the frugal Sabines led;
So Remus and his brother god were bred. Dryden's Virg.

7. Continuance of our present state.
And some have not any clear ideas of the greatest part of them all their lives. Locke.
The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens. Addison on Italy.

8. The living form; resemblance exactly copied.
Galen hath explained this point unto the life. Brown.
He

as copy from originals, and join theory and experience together. Collier of the Entertainment of Books.

9. Exact resemblance.
I believe no character of any person was ever better drawn to the life than this. Denham.
Rich carvings, portraiture, and imagery,
Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd
The Godhead's pow'r. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
He saw in order painted on the wall
The wars that fame around the world had blown,
All to the life, and ev'ry leader known. Dryden's Æn.

10. General state of man.
Studious they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare!
Unmindful of their Maker. Milton's Par. Lost.
All that cheers or softens life,
The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope.
Common occurrences; human affairs; the course of things.
This I know, not only by reading of books in my study, but also by experience of life abroad in the world. Ascham.
Not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle; but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom. Milton's Paradise Lost.

12. Living person.
Why should I play the Roman fool, and die
On my own sword? whilst I live lives the gashes
Do better upon them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Plutarch, that writes his life,
Tells us, that Cato dearly lov'd his wife. Pope.

14. Spirit; briskness; vivacity; resolution.
The Helots bent thitherward with a new life of resolution, as if their captain had been a root out of which their courage had sprung. Sidney.
They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words; and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is as good oratory and poetry to them as the best. Felton.
Not with half the fire and life,
With which he kiss'd Amphyrion's wife. Prior.

15. Animated existence; animal being.
Full nature swarms with life. Thomson.

LIFEBLOOD. n. f. [from life and blood.] The blood necessary to life;
the vital blood.
This sickness doth infect
The very lifeblood of our enterprise. Shakel. Henry IV.
How could'st thou drain the lifeblood of the child. Shak.
They loved with that calm and noble value which dwells in the heart, with a warmth like that of lifeblood. Speetator.
Money, the lifeblood of the nation,
Corrupts and stagnates in the veins,
Unless a proper circulation
Its motion and its heat maintains.
His forehead struck the ground,
Lifeblood and life rush'd mingled through the wound. Dryd.

LIFEVERLASTING. An herb. Ansforth.

LIFEGIVING. n. f. [from life and giving.] Having the power to give life.
His own heat,
Kindled at first from heaven's lifegiving fire. Spenser.
He sat devising death
To them who liv'd; nor on the virtue thought
Of that lifegiving plant. Milton's Paradise Lost.

LIFEGUARD. n. f. [from life and guard.] The guard of a king's person.
LIFELESS. adj. [from life.]
1. Dead; deprived of life.
The other victor-flame a moment flood,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood. Dryden.
I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier. Prior.

2. Unanimated; void of life.
Was I to have never parted from thy side?
As good have grown there still a lifeless rib! Milt. P. L.
Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The power which produces their motions, springs from something without themselves: if this power were suspended, they would become a lifeless, unactive heap of matter. Cheyne.
And empty words the gave, and sounding strain,
But senseless, lifeless! idol void and vain. Pope's Dunciad.

3. Without power, force, or spirit.
Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon wend,
But to procrastinate his lifeless end.
Unknowing to command, proud to obey
A lifeless king, a royal shade I lay. Shakespeare.

L I F

I have of thy health and thy welfare,
Which many wild beasts ligger in wait,
For to entrap in thy tender state. Spenser's Pastorals.

LIGAMENT. n. f. [ligamentum, from ligo, Latin; ligament, French.]
Ligament is a white and solid body, softer than a cartilage, but harder than a membrane; they have no conspicuous cavities, neither have they any fenel, lest they should suffer upon the motion of the joint: their chief use is to fasten the bones, which are articulated together for motion, lest they should be dislocated with exercise. Quincy.
Be all their ligaments at once unbound,
And their disjointed bones to powder ground. Sandys.
The incus situate between the two former is one way joined to the malleus, the other end being a process is fixed with a ligament to the stapes. Holder's Elements of Speech.
2. [In popular or poetical language.] Any thing which connects the parts of the body.
Though our ligaments betimes grow weak,
We must not force them till themselves they break. Denb.
3. Bond; chain; entanglement.
Men sometimes, upon the hour of departure, do speak and reason above themselves; for then the soul, beginning to be freed from the ligaments of the body, reasons like herself, and discourses in a strain above mortality. Addison's Spectator.

LIGAMENTAL. n. f. [from ligament.] Composing a ligament.
LIGAMENTOUS. n. f. ment.
The urachus or ligamentous passage is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it discharges the watery and urinary part of its aliment. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

LIG

no doubt would have given us great light in those matters. Arbutnot on Coins.

3. The part of a picture which is drawn with bright colours, or in which the light is supposed to fall.
Never admit two equal lights in the same picture; but the greater light must strike forcibly on those places of the picture where the principal figures are; diminishing as it comes nearer the borders. Dryden's Discrepancy.

4. Reach of knowledge; mental view.
Light, and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him. Dan. v. 11.
We saw as it were thick clouds, which did put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents that hitherto were not come to light. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
They have brought to light not a few profitable experiments. Bacon's Natural History.

5. Point of view; situation; direction in which the light falls.
Frequent consideration of a thing wears off the strangeness of it; and shews it in its several lights, and various ways of appearance, to the view of the mind. South.
It is impossible for a man of the greatest parts to consider any thing in its whole extent, and in all its variety of lights. Addison's Spectator, No. 409.
An author who has not learned the art of ranging his thoughts, and setting them in proper lights, will lose himself in confusion. Addison's Spectator, No. 291.

6. Explanation.
I have endeavour'd, throughout this discourse, that every former part might give strength unto all that follow, and every latter bring some light unto all before. Hooker, b. i.
We should compare places of scripture treating of the same point: thus one part of the sacred text could not fail to give light unto another. Locke's Essay on St. Paul's Epistles.

7. Any thing that gives light; a pharos; a taper.
That light we see is burning in my hall;
How far that little candle throws his beams,
So shines a good deed in a naughty world. Shakespeare.

I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, for salvation unto the ends of the earth. Acts xiii. 47.
Let them be for signs,
For seasons, and for days, and circling years;
And let them be for lights, as I ordain
Their office in the firmament of heav'n,
To give light on the earth. Milton's Par. Lost.
I put as great difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and an evanid meteor. Glanville's Sleep.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.
I will make some offers at their safety, by fixing some marks like lights upon a coast, by which their ships may avoid at least known rocks. Temple.
He still must mourn
The sun, and moon, and ev'ry starry light, Eclips'd to him, and lost in everlasting night. Prior.

LIGHT. adj. [leoht, Saxon.]

In their embracement. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
Rebekah lifted up her eyes, and when she saw Isaac, she lighted off the camel. Gen. xxiv. 64.
The god laid down his feeble rays,
Then lighted from his glittering coach. Swift.

3. To fall in any particular direction.
The wounded steed curvets; and, rais'd upright,
Lights on his feet before: his hoofs behind
Spring up in air aloft, and lash the wind. Dryden's Æn.

4. To fall; to strike on.
He at his foe with furious rigour smites,
That strongest oak might seem to overthrow;
The stroke upon his shield to heavy lights,
That to the ground it doubleth him full low. Fairy Qu.
At an uncertain lot none can find themselves grieved on whomsoever it lighteth. Hooker, b. i.
They shall hunger no more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. Rev. vii. 16.
On me, me only, as the source and spring
Of all corruption, all the blame lights due. Milt. Pa. L.
A curse lights upon him presently after: his great army is utterly ruined, he himself slain in it, and his head and right hand cut off, and hung up before Jerusalem. South's Sermon.

5. To settle; to rest.
I plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That the will light to listen to their lays. Shakespeare.
Then as a bee which among weeds doth fall,
Which seem sweet flow'rs, with lustre fresh and gay,
She lights on that, and this, and tasteth all,
But pleas'd with none, doth rise and soar away. Davies.
Plant trees and shrubs near home, for them to pitch on at their swarming, that they may not be in danger of being lost for want of a lighting place. Mortimer's Husbandary.

To LIGHTEN. v. n. [lht, Saxon.]
1. To flash, with thunder.
This dreadful night,
That thunders, lightens, opens graves, and roars
As doth the lion. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Although I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this contract to night;
It is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden;
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be Ere one can say it lightens. Shakespeare. Romeo and Juliet.
The lightning that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, sheweth unto the other part. Luke xvii. 24.

2. To shine like lightning.
Yet looks he like a king: behold his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth Controlling majesty. Shakespeare. Richard II.

3. To fall or light. [from light.]
O Lord, let thy mercy lighten upon us, as our trust is in thee. Common Prayer.

To LIGHTEN. v. a. [from light.]
1. To illuminate; to enlighten.
Upon his bloody finger he doth wear
A precious ring, that lightens all the hole. Shakespeare.
O light, which mak'st the light which makes the day,
Which sett'st the eye without, and mind within;
Lighten my spirit with one clear heav'nly ray,
Which now to view itself doth first begin. Davies.
A key of fire ran all along the shore,
And lighten'd all the river with a blaze. Dryden.

The mariners were afraid, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them. Jen. i. 7.
3. To make less heavy.
Long since with woe
Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof,
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load. Parad. Reg.
- In offices of love how we may lighten
Each other's burden. Milt. Pa. Lost.
4. To exhilarate; to cheer.
A trusty villain, very oft,
When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lightens my humour with his merry jests. Shakespeare.
The audience are grown weary of continued melancholy scenes; and few tragedies shall succeed in this age, if they are not lightened with a course of mirth. Dryd. Span. Friar.
- LIGHTER. n. f. [from light, to make light.] A heavy boat into which ships are lightened or unloaded.
They have cock boats for passengers, and lighters for bur-that some, who hold their heads higher, would be glad to accept. Swift's Story of an injured Lady.

7. Nimble; with agility; not heavily or tardily.
Methought I flood on a wide river's bank;
When on a sudden, Torismond appear'd,
Gave me his hand, and led me lightly o'er;
Leaping and bounding on the billows heads;
Till safely we had reach'd the farther shore. Dryden.
8. Gaily; airily; with levity; without heed or care.
LIGHTMINDED. adj. [light and mind.] Unsettled; unsteady.
He that is hasty to give credit is lightminded. Ecl. xix. 4.
- LIGHTNESS. n. f. [from light.]
1. Levity; want of weight; absence of weight.
Some are for masts of ships, as fir and pine, because of their length, straightness, and lightness. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Suppose many degrees of littleness and lightness in particles;
so as many might float in the air a good while before they fell. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.
2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness.
For, unto knight there is no greater flame,
Than lightness and inconstancy in love. Fairy Queen.
Of two things they must chuse one; namely, whether they would, to their endless disgrace, with ridiculous lightness, dismiss him, whose restitution they had in so important manner desired, or else condescend unto that demand. Hooker.
- As I blow this feather from my face,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the gentlest gulf;
Such is the lightness of you common men. Shakespeare.
3. Unchastity; want of conduct in women.
Is it the disdain of my estate, or the opinion of my lightness, that have emboldened such base fancies towards me?
Sidney, b. ii.
- Can it be,
That modesty may more betray our sense,
Than woman's lightness. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.
4. Agility; nimbleness.
LIGHTNING. n. f. [from lighten, lightening, lightning.]
1. The flash that attends thunder.
Lightning is a great flame, very bright, extending every way to a great distance, suddenly darting upwards, and there ending, so that it is only momentaneous. Muschenbrot.
Sense thinks the lightning born before the thunder;
What tells us then they both together are?
Salmonous, full ring cruel pains I found
For emulating Jove; the rattling found
Of mimic thunder, and the glittering blaze
Of pointed lightnings, and their forked rays. Dryd. Æn.
No warning of the approach of flame,
Swiftly, like sudden death, it came;
Like travellers by lightning kill'd.
I burnt the moment I beheld. Granville.
2. Mitigation; abatement.
How oft when men are at the point of death,
Have they been merry? which their keepers call
A lightning before death. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
We were once in hopes of his recovery, upon a kind mellage from the widow; but this only proved a lightning before death. Addison's Spectator, No. 517.
- LIGHTS. n. f. [supposed to be called so from their lightness in proportion to their bulk.] The lungs; the organs of breathing.
The complaint was chiefly from the lights, a part as of no quick sense, so no feat for any sharp disease. Hayward.
- LIGHTSOME. adj. [from light.]
1. Luminous; not dark; not obscure; not opaque.
Neither the sun, nor any thing sensible is that light itself, which is the cause that things are lightsome, though it make itself, and all things else, visible; but a body most enlightened, by whom the neighbouring region, which the Greeks call æther, the place of the supposed element of fire, is effected and qualified. Raleigh.
White walls make rooms more lightsome than black. Bac.
Equal posture, and quick spirits, are required to make colours lightsome. Bacon's Nat. History.

His course exalted through the Ram had run Through Taurus, and the lightsome realms of love. Dryd.
2. Gay; airy; having the power to exhilarate.
It suiteth so fitly with that lightsome affection of joy, wherein God delighteth when his saints praise him. Hooker.
The lightsome passion of joy was not that which now often usurps the name; that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South's Sermons.
- LIGHTSOMENESS. n. f. [from lightsome.]
1. Luminousness; not opacity; not obscurity; not darkness-ness. It

LIK

the trees of lignales which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the water. Nun. xxiv. 6.
- LIGNEOUS. adj. [ligneus, Latin; ligneux, French.] Made of wood; wooden; resembling wood.
It should be tried with shoots of vines, and roots of red roses; for it may be they, being of a more ligneous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- Ten thousand seeds of the plant harts-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn: now the covers, and the true body of each feed, the parenchymous and ligneous part of both, and the fibres of those parts, multiplied one by another, afford a hundred thousand millions of formed atoms, but how many more we cannot define. Grew's Cosmol.
- LIGNUM/VITÆ. n. f. [Lat.] Guaiacum; a very hard wood.
It hath pinnated leaves; the flower consists of several petals, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose; the point of the flower, which arises from the center of the calyx, becomes a fleshy, roundish, stony fruit, or the stony seeds are surrounded with a thin pulp. Miller.

A third the like. Daniel's Civil War.
- By conversation with his like to help,
Or loose his defects. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. viii.
Two likes may be mistaken. L'Estrange's Fab.
She'd study to reform the men,
Or add some grains of folly more,
To women than they had before;
This might their mutual fancy strike,
Since ev'ry being loves its like. Swift.
2. Near approach; a state like to another state. A sense common, but not just.
Report being carried secretly from one to another in my ship, had like to have been my utter overthrow. Raleigh.
- LIKE. adv.
1. In the same manner; in the same manner as.
The joyous nymphs, and lightfoot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet;
Now hearing them so heavily lament,
Like heavily lamenting from them went. Spenser.

LIK

- Like* as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. Psal. ciii. 13.

God and Messiah. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. vi.
- TO LIKE. v. n.
1. To be pleased with, with of before the thing approved.
Obsolete.
Of any thing more than of God they could not by any means like, as long as whatsoever they knew besides God, they apprehended it not in itself without dependancy upon God. Hooker, b. i.
The young soldiers did with such cheerfulness like of this resolution, that they thought two days a long delay. Kneller.
It is true, there are limits to be set betwixt the boldness and rashness of a poet; but he must understand those limits who pretends to judge, as well as he who undertakes to write: and he who has no liking to the whole, ought in reason to be excluded from censuring the parts. Dryden.
2. To chuse; to list; to be pleased.
The man likes not to take his brother's wife. Deut. xxv. 7.

By any likelihood he shew'd to-day?
That with no man here he is offended. Shakespeare.
2. Resemblance; likeness. Obsolete.
The mayor and all his brethren in best sort,
Like to the senators of antique Rome,
Go forth and fetch their conquering Cæsar in.
As by a low, but loving likelihood,
Were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
How many would the peaceful city quit,
To welcome him. Shakespeare's Henry V.
There is no likelihood between pure light and black darkness, or between righteousness and reprobation. Raleigh.
3. Probability; verisimilitude; appearance of truth.
As it noteth one such to have been in that age, so had there

 By fandy Ladon's lilied banks. Milton.
LYLY, n. f. [lilium, Latin.]
 The lily hath a bulbous root, consisting of several fleshy scales adhering to an axis; the stalk is greatly furnished with leaves; the flower is composed of six leaves, and is shaped somewhat like a bell: in some species the petals are greatly reflexed, but in others but little; from the centre of the flower rises the pointal, which becomes an oblong fruit, commonly triangular, divided into three cells, and full of compressed seeds, which are bordered, lying upon each other in a double row. There are thirty-two species of this plant, including white lilies, orange lilies, red lilies, and martagons of various sorts. Miller.
 Oh! had the monster seen those lily hands
 Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
 And make the silken strings delight to kiss them;
 He would not then have touch'd them for his life. Shakespeare.
 Shipwreck'd upon a kingdom where no pity!
 No friends! no hope! no kindred weep for me!
 Almost no grave allow'd me! like the lily,
 That once was mistress of the field, and flourish'd,
 I'll hang my head, and perish. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.
 Arnus, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right side a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lily, or flower-de-luce. Peasam on Drawing.
 Take but the humblest lily of the field;
 And if our pride will to our reason yield;
 It must by sure comparison be shown,
 That on the regal seat great David's son,
 Array'd in all his robes, and types of pow'r, Shines with less glory than that simple flow'r. Prior.
 Go, gentle gales, and bear my sighs along:
 For her the feather'd quires forget their song,
 For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.
LYLY-DAFFODIL, n. f. [lilio-narcissus.] A foreign flower.
LYLY-HYACINTH, n. f. [lilio-hyacinthus.]
 It hath a lily flower, composed of six leaves, shaped like the flower of hyacinth, whose pointal becomes a globular pointed fruit, three-cornered, and divided into three cells, in which are contained many seeds, almost round: the roots are scaly, and shaped like those of the lily. There are three species of this plant; one with a blue flower, another white, and a third red. Miller.
LYLY of the Valley, or May lily, n. f. [lilium convallium.]
 The flower consists of one leaf, is shaped like a bell, and divided at the top into six segments; the ovary becomes a soft globular fruit, containing several round seeds. It is very common in shady woods.

LIM

All others from all things draw all that's good,
 Life, soul, form, spirit, where they being have;
 I, by love's limbeck. Donne.
 Fires of Spain, and the line,
 Whose countries limbeck to our bodies be,
 Canst thou for gain bear? Donne.
 Call up, unbound,
 In various shapes, old Proteus from the sea,
 Drain'd through a limbeck to his naked form. Milton.
 The earth, by secret conveyances, lets in the sea, and sends it back fresh, her bowels serving for a limbeck. Hawell.
 He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes,
 Yet judg'd, like vapours that from limbeck rise,
 It would in richer flowers descend again. Dryden.
 The warm limbeck draws Salubrious waters from the nocent brood. Philips.

 A fleet of five years age, large limb'd, and fed,
 To Jove's high altars Agamemnon led. Pope's Iliad.
LYMBER, adj. Flexible; easily bent; pliant; lithe.
 You put me off with limber vows. Shakespeare.
 I wonder how, among these jealousies of court and state,
 Edward Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitate heir of the Saxon line: but he had tried, and found him a prince of limber virtues; so as though he might have some place in his caution, yet he reckoned him beneath his fear. Watson.
 At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
 Insect, or worm: those wav'd their limber fans
 For wings; and smallest lineaments exact
 In all the liveries deck'd of Summer's pride.
 She durst never stand at the bay, having nothing but her long soft limber ears to defend her. More on Atheism.
 The muscles were strong on both sides of the aspera arteria, but on the under side, opposite to that of the oesophagus, very limber. Ray on Creation.
 At last the ulcer is covered over with a limber callus. Harv.

LYMBO, n. f. [lō quod sit limbus inferorum. Du Cange.]
 1. A region bordering upon hell, in which there is neither pleasure nor pain. Popularly hell.
 No, he is in tartar limbo, worse than hell,
 A devil in an everlasting garment hath him,
 One whole hard heart is button'd up with steel. Shakespeare.
 Oh what a sympathy of woe is this!
 As far from help as limbo is from bliss. Shakespeare.
 All these up-whirl'd aloft
 Fly o'er the backside of the world far off,
 Into a limbo large, and broad, since call'd
 The paradise of fools. Milton's Paradise Lost, b. iii.
 2. Any place of misery and restraint.
 For he no sooner was at large,
 But Trulla straight brought on the charge;
 And in the self-same limbo put
 The knight and squire, where he was shut. Hudibras.
 Friar, thou art come off thyself, but poor I am left in limbo. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
LIME, n. f. [lim, xelyman, Saxon, to glue.]
 1. A viscous substance drawn over twigs, which catches and entangles the wings of birds that light upon it.
 Poor bird! should'st never fear the net or lime,
 The pitfall, nor the gin. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 You must lay lime, to tangle her desires,
 By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
 Should be full fraught with servicable vows. Shakespeare.
 Monster, come put some lime upon your fingers, and away with the rest. Shakespeare's Tempest.
 Jollier of this state
 Than are new-benefic'd ministers, he throws,
 Like nets or lime twigs, whoso'er he goes,
 His title of barrister on every wench. Donne.
 A poor thrush was taken with a bush of lime twigs. L'Estrange's Fables.
 Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,
 And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround. Dryden.
 Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts
 Like nets, or lime twigs, for rich widows hearts. Pope.
 2. Matter of which mortar is made: so called because used in cement.
 There are so many species of lime stone, that we are to understand by it in general any stone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calx, which will make a great coagulation and noise on being thrown into water, falling into a loose white powder at the bottom. The lime we have in London is usually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of stone. Hill's Materia Medica.
 They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, especially as many as were English, who were at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their side. Bacon's Henry VII.

LIM

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
 We never hear the workmen prais'd,
 Who bring the lime, or place the stones,
 But all admire Inigo Jones. Swift.
 Lime is commonly made of chalk, or of any sort of stone that is not sandy, or very cold; as freestone, &c. Mortimer.
LIME tree, or LINDEN, n. f.
 [Lins, Saxon.] The linden tree.
 The flower consists of several leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a rose, having a long narrow leaf growing to the footstalk of each cluster of flowers, from whose cup rises the pointal, which becomes reticulated, of one capsule, containing an oblong seed. The timber is used by carvers and turners. These trees continue found many years, and grow to a considerable bulk. Sir Thomas Brown mentions one, in Norfolk, sixteen yards in circuit. Millar.
 Go, gentle gales! and bear my sighs along.
 For her the limes their pleasing shades deny,
 For her the lilies hang their heads, and die. Pope.
 4. A species of lemon. [lime, French.]
 Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves;
 To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
 With the deep orange glowing through the green,
 Their lighter glories blend. Thomson's Summer.
 To LIME, v. a. [from lime.]
 1. To entangle; to ensnare.
 Oh bosome, black as death!
 Oh limed foul, that, struggling to be free,
 Art more engaged. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 Example, that fo terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot, for all that, dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them. Shakespeare.
 The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
 With trembling wings mildoubeth ev'ry bush;
 And I, the hapless male to one sweet bird,
 Have now the fatal object in my eye,
 Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
 2. To smear with lime.
 Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
 And place a quire of such enticing birds,
 That she will light to listen to their lays. Shakespeare.
 Those twigs in time will come to be limed, and then you are all lost if you do but touch them. L'Estrange.
 3. To cement.
 I will not ruin my father's house,
 Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
 And let up Lancaster. Shakespeare, Henry VI.
 4. To manure ground with lime.
 The reason why they did so was, because of the encouragement which that abatement of interest gave to landlords and tenants, to improve by drainings, marling, and liming. Child.
 All sorts of pease love limed or marled land. Mortimer.
LYMEKILN, n. f. [lime and kiln.] Kiln where stones are burnt to lime.

Then, when I am thy captive, talk of chains,
Proud limitary cherub!

LIMITATION. n. f. [limitation, French; limitatio, Latin.]
1. Restriction; circumscription.

Limitation of each creature, is both the perfection and the preservation thereof.

Am I yourself,
But, as it were, in sort of limitation.

I despair, how this limitation of Adam's empire to his line and posterity, will help us to one heir. This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save those the labour, who would look for him amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery amongst men.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch; if he afterwards consent to limitations, he becomes immediately king de jure.

2. Confinement from a lax or undeterminate import.

The cause of error is ignorance; what restraints and limitations all principles have in regard of the matter whereunto they are applicable.

LIMMER. n. f. A mongrel.

To limmer, v. a. [enluminer, French, to adorn books with pictures.] To draw; to paint any thing.

Emblems limm'd in lively colours.
How are the glories of the field spun, and by what pencil are they limm'd in their unaffected bravery?

LIMNER. n. f. [corrupted from enluminer, a decorator of books with initial pictures.] A painter; a picture-maker.

That divers limners at a distance, without either copy or design, should draw the same picture to an indistinguishable exactness, is more conceivable than that matter, which is so diversified, should frame itself so innately, according to the idea of its kind.

Poets are limners of another kind,
To copy out ideas in the mind;
Words are the paint by which their thoughts are shown,
And nature is their object to be drawn.

LIMOUS. adj. [limosus, Latin.] Muddy; slimy.

That country became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees unto a firm land.

They esteemed this natural melancholick acidity to be the limous or slimy feculent part of the blood.

limp and tasteless.

2. It is used in some provinces, and in Scotland, for limber, flexible.

To limp, v. n. [limpen, Saxon.] To halt; to walk lamely.

An old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step
Limp'd in pure love.

Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping fire.

The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprising it; so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance.

When Plutus, which is riches, is sent from Jupiter, he limps and goes slowly; but when he is sent by Pluto, he runs, and is swift of foot.

Limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date.

The limping smith observ'd the fadden'd caft,
And hopping here and there put in his word.

No: majors soon with minors fight:
Or both in friendly comfort join'd,
The consequence limps false behind.

LIMPET. n. f. A kind of shell fish.

LIMPID. adj. [limpidus, French; limpidus, Lat.] Clear; pure; transparent.

One a hard oak, a foster linden one.

LINE. n. f. [linea, Latin.]
1. Longitudinal extension.

Even the planets, upon this principle, must gravitate no more towards the Sun; so that they would not revolve in curve lines, but fly away in direct tangents, till they struck against other planets.

2. A slender string.

Well sung the Roman bard; all human things,
Of dearest value, hang on slender strings;
O see the then sole hope, and in design
Of heav'n our joy, supported by a line.

A line seldom holds to strein, or draws streight in length, above fifty or sixty feet.

3. A thread extended to direct any operations.

We as by line upon the ocean go,
Whose paths shall be familiar as the land.

When that my mother went with child
Of that insatiate Edward, noble York
Found that the issue was not his begot:

LIN

Which well appeared in his lineaments,
Being nothing like the noble duke, my father.

In companions
There must needs be a like proportion

Of lineaments, of manners, and of spirit.

Six wings he wore, to shade
His lineaments divine.

Man he seems
In all his lineaments, though in his face
The glimpses of his father's glory shine.

There are not more differences in mens faces, and the outward lineaments of their bodies, than there are in the makes and tempers of their minds; only there is this difference, that the distinguishing characters of the face, and the lineaments of the body, grow more plain with time, but the peculiar physiognomy of the mind is most discernible in children.

Advance religion and morals, by tracing some few lineaments in the character of a lady, who hath spent all her life in the practice of both.

The utmost force of boiling water is not able to destroy the structure of the tenderest plant: the lineaments of a white lily will remain after the strongest decoction.

LINEAR. adj. [linearis, Latin.] Composed of lines; having the form of lines.

will soon learn. Holder's Elements of Speech.

LINGUIST. n. f. [from lingua.] A man skilful in languages.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet, if he had not studied the solid things in them, as well as the words and lexicons, he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man, as any yeoman or tradesman competently wise in his mother dialect only. Milton on Education.

Our linguist received extraordinary rudiments towards a good education. Addison's Spectator.

LINGWORT. n. f. An herb.

LINIMENT. n. f. [liniment, French; linimentum, Lat.] Ointment; balsam; unguent.

The nostrils, and the jugular arteries, ought to be anoint-ed every morning with this liniment or balsam. Harvey.

The wife author of nature hath provided on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily pap or liniment, fit for the inunction of the feathers. Ray on Creation.

LINING. n. f. [from line.]

1. The inner covering of any thing; the inner double of a garment.

Was I deceived, or did a sable cloud

Turn forth her silver lining on the night. Milton.

The folds in the grille of the nose is covered with a lining, which differs from the facing of the tongue. Grew's Cosmol.

The gown with stiff embroidery shining,

Looks charming with a lighter lining. Prior.

2. That which is within.

The lining of his coffers shall make coats

To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars. Shakefp.

LINK. n. f. [Gelencke, German.]

1. A single ring of a chain.

The Roman state, whose course will yet go on

The way it takes, cracking ten thousand curbs

Of more strong links asunder, than can ever

Appear in your impediment. Shakefp.'s Coriolanus.

The moral of that poetical fiction, that the uppermost link of all the series of subordinate causes, is fastened to Jupiter's chair, signifies an useful truth. Hale.

Truths hang together in a chain of mutual dependance;

you cannot draw one link without attracting others. Glanville.

While she does her upward flight sustain,

Touching each link of the continued chain,

At length she is oblig'd and forc'd to see

A first, a source, a life, a deity. Prior.

2. Any thing doubled and closed together.

Make a link of horse hair very strong, and fasten it to the end of the stick that springs. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. A chain; any thing connecting.

Nor airless dungeons, nor strong links of iron,

Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shakefp.

I feel

The link of nature draw me; flesh of flesh,

Bone of my bone thou art. Milton's Par. Lost, b. ix.

Fire, flood and earth, and air, by this were bound,

And love, the common link, the new creation crown'd.

Dryden's Knight's Tale.

4. Any single part of a series or chain of consequences; a gradation in ratiocination; a proposition joined to a foregoing and following proposition.

The thread and train of consequences in intellectual ra-tification is often long, and chained together by divers links, which cannot be done in imaginative ratiocination by some attributed to brutes. Judge Hale.

5. A series: this sense is improper. Addison has used link for chain.

LIN

Though I have here only chosen this single link of martyrs,

I might find out others among those names which are still extant, that delivered down this account of our Saviour in a successful tradition. Addison on the Christian Religion.

6. [From λύκος.] A torch made of pitch and hards.

O, thou art an everlasting bonfire light; thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and torches, walking with thee in the night betwixt tavern and tavern. Shakefp. Henry IV.

Whereas history should be the torch of truth, he makes her in divers places a fuliginous link of lies. Hewel.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,

Goody and great he fails behind his link. Dryden.

One that bore a link

On a sudden clapp'd his flaming cudgel,

Like Linkstock, to the horse's touch-hole. Hudibras, p. ii.

7. Perhaps in the following passage it may mean lamp-black.

There was no link to colour Peter's hat;

And Walter's dagger was not come from theaching. Shak.

To LINK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To complicate; as, the links of a chain.

Descending tread us down

Thus drooping; or with linked thunderbolts

Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph. Milt. Par. Lost.

Against eating cares,

Lap me in soft Lydian airs;

Married to immortal verse,

Such as the meeting soul may pierce

In notes, with many a winding thought

Of linked sweetness long drawn out. Milton.

2. To unite; to conjoin in concord.

They're so link'd in friendship,

That young prince Edward marries Warwick's daughter.

Shakefp.'s Henry VI. p. iii.

3. To join.

Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,

Inclose whole downs in walls, 'tis all a joke. Pope's Hor.

So from the first eternal order ran,

And creature link'd to creature, man to man. Pope.

4. To join by confederacy or contract.

They make an offer of themselves into the service of that enemy, with whose servants they link themselves in to near a bond. Hobbes, b. ii.

Be advised for the best,

Ere thou thy daughter link in holy band

Of wedlock, to that new unknown guest. Fairy Queen.

Blood in princes link'd not in such fort,

As that it is of any pow'r to tye. Daniel's Civil War.

5. To connect.

New hope to spring

Out of despair; joys, but with fear yet link'd. Milton.

God has link'd our hopes and our duty together. Dec. of Pl.

So gracious hath God been to us, as to link together our duty and our interest, and to make those very things the instances of our obedience, which are the natural means and causes of our happiness. Tillotson's Sermons.

6. To unite or concatenate in a regular series of consequences.

These things are linked, and, as it were, chained one to another: we labour to eat, and we eat to live, and we live to do good; and the good which we do is as seed sown, with reference unto a future harvest. Hooker, b. i.

Tell me, which part it does necessitate?

I'll chuse the other; there I'll link th' effect;

A chain, which fools to catch themselves project! Dryd.

By which chain of ideas thus visibly linked together in train, i. e. each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two, it is immediately placed between, the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected. Lack.

LINKBOY. n. f. [link and boy.] A boy that carries a torch to accommodate passengers with light.

What a ridiculous thing it was, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous disclusions of light, to prevent the officiousness of the linkboy.

Mor's Divine Dialogues.

Though thou art tempted by the linkman's call,

Yet trust him not along the lonely wall. Gay.

In the black form of cinder wench the came.

O may no linkboy interrupt their love. Gay's Trivia.

LINNET. n. f. [linet, French.] A small singing bird.

The swallows make use of celandine, the linnet of euphra-gia, for the repairing of their light. Mor's Antidote.

Is it for thee the linnet pours his throat?

Pope.

LINSEED. n. f. [linen lini, Latin.] The seed of flax, which is much used in medicine.

The joints may be clofed with a cement of lime, linseed oil, and cotton. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LINSEYWOOLSEY. adj. [linen and wool.] Made of linen and wool mixed. Vile; mean; of different and unsuitable parts.

A lawless linseywoolsey brother,

Half of one order, half another. Hudibras, p. i.

Peel'd, patch'd and pyebald, linseywoolsey brothers,

Grave mummies! sleeveless some, and shirtless others.

Pope's Dunciad, b. iii.

LINSTOCK.

LIP

LINSTOCK. n. f. [linite or lente, Teutonic, lini and stock.] A staff of wood with a match at the end of it, used by gunners in firing cannon. Hammer.

The nimble gunner

With linstock now the devilish cannon touches,

And down goes all before him. Shakefp. Henry V.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,

The linstocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires. Dryden.

LINT. n. f. [linetum, Latin; lin, Welsh and Erse.]

1. The soft substance commonly called flax.

2. Lint scraped into soft woolly substance to lay on sores.

I dressed them up with unguentum basilici cuni vitello ovi, upon pledges of lint. Wiseham's Surgery.

LINTEL. n. f. [lineteaux, from linetel, French.] That part of the door frame that lies cross the door posts over head.

Take a bunch of hylop, and dip it in the blood that is in the bafon, and strike the lintel and the two side posts. Exod.

When you lay any timber on brick work, as lintels over windows, lay them in loam, which is a great preserver of timber. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

Silver the lintels deep projecting o'er,

And gold the ringlets that command the door. Pope's Odyf.

LION. n. f. [lion, French; leo, Latin.] The fiercest and most magnanimous of fourfooted beasts.

King Richard's firname was Cor-de-Lion, for his lion-like courage. Camden's Remains.

Dismay'd not this

Our captains Macbeth and Banquo? — Yes, Shakefp.

As sparrows, eagles, or the hare, the lion.

Be lion mettled; proud, and take no care

Who chafes, who frets, or where conspirers are;

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be. Shakefp. Macbeth.

The sphinx, a famous monster in Egypt, had the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion. Peasam on Drawing.

They rejoice

Each with their kind, lion with lions;

So fitly them in pairs thou hast combin'd. Milt. Pa. Lost.

The lion for the honours of his kin,

The squeezing crab, and stinging scorpion shine

For aiding heaven, when giants dar'd to brave

The threaten'd stars. Creech's Manilius.

See lion hearted Richard,

Piously valiant, like a torrent swell'd

With wintry tempests, that diddains all mounds,

Breaking away impetuous, and involves

Within its sweep trees, houses, men, he pres'd;

Amidst the thickest battle. Philips.

LIONESS. n. f. [feminine of lion.] A she lion.

Under which bush's shade, a lioness

LIQUOR. n. f. [liquor, Latin; liqueur, French.]
 1. Any thing liquid: it is commonly used of fluids inebriating, or impregnated with something, or made by decoction.
 Nor envy'd them the grape
 Whose heads that turbulent liquor fills with fumes. Milton.
 Sin taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons. South's Sermons.
 2. Strong drink; in familiar language.
 To LIQUOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To drench or moisten.
 Cart wheels squeak not when they are liquored. Bacon.
LIRICO'NFANCY. n. f. A flower.
LISNE. n. f. A cavity; a hollow.
 In the lisne of a rock at Kingscote in Gloucestershire, I found a bushel of petrified cockles, each near as big as my fist.
To LISPE. v. n. [lispe, Saxon.] To speak with too frequent appulses of the tongue to the teeth or palate, like children.
 Come, I cannot cog, and say, thou art this and that, like a many of these lisping hawthorn buds, that come like women in mens apparel, and smell like Bucklerbury in simpling time.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
 Scarce had she learnt to lisp a name
 Of martyr, yet she thinks it shame
 Life should so long play with that breath,
 Which spent can buy so brave a death. Crashaw.
 They ramble not to learn the mode,
 How to be drest, or how to lisp abroad. Cleveland.
 Appulse partial, giving some passage to breath, is made to the upper teeth, and causes a lisping sound, the breath being strained through the teeth. Holder's Elements of Speech.
 As yet a child, nor yet a fool to fame,
 I lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers came. Pope.
LISP. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of lisping.
 I overheard her answer, with a very pretty lisp, O! Strephon, you are a dangerous creature. Tatler, No. 60.
LISPER. n. f. [from lisp.] One who lisps.
LISPE. n. f. [lispe, French.]
 1. A roll; a catalogue.
 He was the ablest emperor of all the lispe. Bacon.
 Some say the loadstone is poison, and therefore in the lisps of poisons we find it in many authors. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
 Bring next the royal lispe of Stuarts forth, Undaunted minds, that rul'd the rugged north. Prior.
 2. [Lispe, French.] Inclosed ground in which tilts are run, and combats fought.
 The ocean, overpeering of his lispe,
 Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
 Than young Laertes in a riotous head
 O'er-bears your officers. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 She within lisps my ranging mind hath brought,
 That now beyond myself I will not go. Davies.
 Till now alone the mighty nations strove,
 The rest, at gaze, without the lisps did stand;
 And threatening France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
 Kept idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.
 Paris thy son, and Sparta's king advance,
 In measur'd lisps to tofs the weighty lance;
 And who his rival shall in arms subdue,
 His be the dame, and his the treasure too. Pope's Iliad.
 3. [Lyspe, Saxon.] Desire; willingness; choice.
 Alas, she has no lispe!
 —Too much;
 I find it still when I have lispe to sleep. Shakespeare's Othello.
 Nothing of passion or peevishness, or lispe to contradict,
 Shall have any bias on my judgment. King Charles.
 He saw false reynard where he lay full low;
 I need not swear he had no lispe to crow. Dryden.
 4. [Licium, Latin; lispe, French.] A strip of cloth.
 A linen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot hose on the other, gartered with a red and blue lispe. Shakespeare.
 Instead of a lispe of cotton, or the like filtre, we made use of a siphon of glass.
 A lispe the cobbler's temples ties,
 To keep the hair out of his eyes. Swift.
 5. A border.
 They thought it better to let them stand as a lispe, or marginal border, unto the Old Testament.
To LIST. v. n. [lytan, Saxon.] To chuse; to desire; to be disposed; to incline.
 Let other men think of your devices as they list, in my judgment they be mere fantasies.
 Unto them that add to the word of God what them listeth, and make God's will submit unto their will, and break God's commandments for their own tradition's sake, unto them it seemeth not good.
 They imagine, that laws which permit them not to do as they would, will endure them to speak as they list. Hooker.
 To fight in field, or to defend this wall,
 Point what you list, I nought refuse at all. Fairy Queen.
 Now by my mother's son, and that's myself,
 It shall be moon, or star, or what I list. Shakespeare.

LIS

Kings, lords of times, and of occasions, may Take their advantage when, and how, they list. Daniel.
 When they list, into the womb
 That bred them they return; and howl, and gnaw
 My bowels, their repast. Milton's Paradise Lost.
To LIST. v. a. [from list, a roll.]
 1. To enlist; to enrol or register.
 For a man to give his name to Christianity in those days, was to list himself a martyr, and to bid farewell not only to the pleasures, but also to the hopes of this life. South.
 They list with women each degen'rate name,
 Who dares not hazard life for future fame. Dryden's En.
 2. To retain and enrol soldiers.
 The lords would, by listing their own servants, persuade the gentlemen in the town to do the like. Clarendon, b. viii.
 The king who raised this wall appointed a million of soldiers, who were listed and paid for the defence of it against the Tartars. Temple.
 Two hundred horse he shall command;
 Though few, a warlike and well-chosen band,
 These in my name are listed. Dryden.
 3. [From list; enclosed ground.] To enclose for combats.
 How dares your pride presume against my laws,
 As in a listed field to fight your cause?
 Unask'd the royal grant. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
 4. [From list, a shred or border.] To few together, in such a sort as to make a particoloured shew.
 Some may wonder at such an accumulation of benefits, like a kind of embroidery or listing of one favour upon another. Watson's Life of Buckingham.
 5. [Contracted from listen.] To hearken to; to listen; to attend.
 Then weigh, what loss your honour may sustain,
 If with too credent ear you list his song;
 Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
 To his unmaster'd importunity. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
 I, this found I better know:
List! I would I could hear mo. Benj. Johnson.
LISTED. adj. Striped; particoloured in long streaks.
 Over his head beholds
 A dewy cloud, and in the cloud a bow
 Conspicuous, with three listed colours gay, Betok'ning peace from God, and covenant new. Milton.
 As the flow'ry arch
 With listed colours gay, or, azure, gules,
 Delights, and puzzles the beholder's eyes. Phillips.
To LISTEN. v. a. To hear; to attend. Obsolete.
 Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say. Shakespeare.
 One cried, God bless us! and, amen! the other;
 As they had seen me with these hangman's hands,
Listening their fear I could not say, amen. Shakespeare.
 He, that no more must say, is listened more
 Than they whom youth and ease have taught to glose.
 The wonted roar was up amidst the woods,
 And filled the air with barbarous dissonance,
 At which I ceas'd and listened them a while. Milton.
To LISTEN. v. n. To hearken; to give attention.
Listen to me, and if you speak me fair,
 I'll tell you news. Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew.
 Antigonus used often to go disguised, and listen at the tents of his soldiers; and at a time heard some that spoke very ill of him: whereupon he said, If you speak ill of me, you should go a little farther off. Bacon's Apophthegms.
Listen, O iles, unto me, and hearken, ye people. Isa. xlix.
 When we have occasion to listen, and give a more particular attention to some sound, the tympanum is drawn to a more than ordinary tension. Holder's Elements of Speech.
 On the green bank I sat, and listened long;
 Nor till her lay was ended could I move,
 But with'd to dwell for ever in the grove.
 He shall be receiv'd with more regard,
 And listened to, than modest truth is heard. Dryden.
 To this humour most of our late comedies owe their success: the audience listens after nothing else. Addison.
LISTENER. n. f. [from listen.] One that hearkens: a hearkener.
 They are light of belief, and great listeners after news. Howell.
Listeners never hear well of themselves. L'Estrange.
 If she constantly attends the tea, and be a good listener, she may make a tolerable figure, which will serve to draw in the young chaplain.
 The huff word, when spoke by any brother in a lodge, was a warning to the rest to have a care of listeners. Swift.
LISTLESS. adj. [from list.]
 1. Without inclination; without any determination to one thing more than another.
 Intemperance and sensuality clog mens spirits, make them grofs, listless, and unactive. Tillotson's Sermons.
 If your care to wheat alone extend,
 Let Maja with her sisters first descend.

Before

LIT

Before you trust in earth your future hope,
 Or else expect a listless, lazy, crop. Dryden's Virg.
 Lazy lolling sort
 Of ever listless loit'ers, that attend
 No cause, no trust.
 I was listless and desponding. Pope.
 2. Careless; heedless.
 The sick for air before the portal gasp,
 Or idle in their empty hives remain,
 Benum'd with cold, and listless of their gain. Dryden.
LIT'LESSELY. adv. [from listless.] Without thought; without attention.
 To know this perfectly, watch him at play, and see whether he be stirring and active, or whether he lazily and listlessly dreams away his time. Locke on Education.

 It may be the palate of the soul is indisposed by listlessness or sorrow.
LIT. the preterite of light; whether to light signifies to happen, or to set on fire, or guide with light.
 Believe thyself, thy eyes,
 That first inflam'd, and lit me to thy love,
 Those stars, that still must guide me to my joy. Southey.
 I lit my pipe with the paper. Addison's Spectator.
LITANY. n. f. [litania; litania, French.] A form of supplicatory prayer.
 Supplications, with solemnity for the appealing of God's wrath, were, of the Greek church, termed litany and rogations of the latin. Hooker, b. v.
 Recollect your sins that you have done that week, and all your life-time; and recite humbly and devoutly some penitential litany. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.
LIT'ERAL. adj. [literal, French; litera, Latin.]
 1. According to the primitive meaning, not figurative.
 Through all the writings of the ancient fathers, we see that the words, which were, do continue; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use, and are as so many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did signify in the letter, is accomplished in the truth. Hooker, b. iv.
 A foundation, being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an house, or other building, nor figurative, but what is founded in that, and deduced from thence. Hammond.
 2. Following the letter, or exact words.
 The fittest for public audience are such as, following a middle course between the rigour of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrases, do with greater shortness and plainness deliver the meaning. Hooker, b. v.
 3. Consisting of letters; as, the literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the cyphers.
LIT'ERALLY. adv. [from literal.]
 How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions unto the people, and what absurd conceits they will swallow in their literals, an example we have in our profession. Brown's Vulg. Errors, b. iv.
LIT'ERALLY. adv. [from literal.]
 1. According to the primitive import of words; not figuratively.
 That a man and his wife are one flesh, I can comprehend the meaning of; yet literally taken, it is a thing impossible. Swift.
 2. With close adherence to words.
 Endeavouring to turn his Nisus and Euryalus as close as I was able, I have performed that episode too literally; that giving more scope to Mezentius and Lausus, that version, which has more of the majesty of Virgil, has less of his conciseness. Dryden.
 So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally; his genius is too strong to bear a chain. Dryden.
LIT'ERALLY. n. f. [from literal.] Original meaning.
 Not attaining the true deuterocopy and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies, and are not sometimes persuaded by fire beyond their literalities. Brown.
LIT'ERATI. n. f. [Italian.] The learned.
 I shall confide some literati on the project sent me for the discovery of the longitude. Spekator, No. 581.

 This kingdom hath been famous for good literature; and if preferment attend deservers, there will not want supplies. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
 When men of learning are acted by a knowledge of the world, they give a reputation to literature, and convince the world of its usefulness. Addison's Freeholder, No. 377.
LIT'ERATURE. n. f. [literature, French; liberaryum, Latin.]
Literature is properly lead vitrified, either alone or with a mixture of copper. This recement is of two kinds, literature of gold, and literature of silver. It is collected from the furnaces where silver is separated from lead, or from those where gold and silver are purified by means of that metal. The literature sold in the shops is produced in the copper works, where lead has been used to purify that metal, or to separate silver from it. It is used in ointments and plaisters, and is drying, abtergent, and slightly attriactive. Hill's Mat. Med.
 I have seen some parcels of glass adhering to the test or cupel as well as the gold or literature. Boyle.
 If the lead be blown off from the silver by the bellows, it will, in great part, be collected in the form of a darkish powder; which, because it is blown off from silver, they call literature of silver. Boyle.
LITHE. adj. [lithe, Saxon.] Limber; flexible; pliant; easily bent.
 Th' unwieldy elephant,
 To make them mirth, us'd all his might, and wreath'd
 His lithe proboscis. Milton's Paradise Lost.
LIT'HESS. n. f. [from lithe.] Limberness; flexibility.
LIT'HER. adj. [from lithe.] Soft; pliant.
 Thou antick, death,
 Two Talbots winged through the lithe sky,
 In thy despatch shall 'scape mortality. Shakespeare.

LITIGANT. n. f. [litigans, Latin; litigant, French.] One engaged in a suit of law.
 The cast litigant sits not down with one cross verdict, but recommences his suit. Deacy of Piety.
 The litigants tear one another to pieces for the benefit of some third interest. L'Estrange's Fables.
LITIGANT. adj. Engaged in a juridical contest.
 Judicial acts are those writings and matters which relate to judicial proceedings, and are sped in open court at the instance of one or both of the parties litigant. Ayliffe's Parerg.
To LITIGATE. v. a. [litigo, Latin.] To contest in law; to debate by judicial process.
To LITIGATE. v. n. To manage a suit; to carry on a cause.
 The appellant, after the interposition of an appeal, still litigates in the same cause. Ayliffe's Parergon.
LITIGATION. n. f. [litigatio, Latin; from litigate.] Judicial contest; suit of law.
 Never one clergyman had experience of both litigations, that hath not confessed, he had rather have three suits in Westminster-hall, than one in the arches. Clarendon.
LITIGIOUS. adj. [litigiosus, French.]
 1. Inclined to law-suits; quarrelsome; wrangling.
 Soldiers find wars, and lawyers find out still Litigious men, who quarrels move. Donne.
 His great application to the law, had not infected his temper with any thing positive or litigious. Addison.
 2. Disputable; controvertible.
 In litigious and controverted causes, the will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine. Hooker.
 No fences parted fields, nor marks, nor bounds, Distinguish'd acres of litigious grounds. Dryden's Georg.
LITIGIOUSLY. adv. [from litigious.] Wranglingly.
LITIGIOUSNESS. n. f. [from litigious.] A wrangling disposition.
